Liberals Fail to Show for Forum

NAIT played host to an all candidates forum in the Naitrium on Thursday, October 7. In front of a substantial crowd, the noon-hour forum covered topics of interest to students such as jobs and training programs.

Scheduled to appear were Judy Bethel of the Liberals, Kevin Kovacs of the PC's, Ross Harvey from the NDP, Linda Robertson of Reform, Ernst Eder of the Green party, and Jim Musson of the National party.

Controversy arose over the absence of Judy Bethel, the Liberal hopeful. After assuring organizers of her intent to appear at the forum, Bethel backed out at the last moment to attend instead a meeting at a Vietnamese Cultural Centre. Bethel's campaign co-ordinators claimed that an aide had double booked the Liberal candidate for the 7th, but the other candidates unanimously agreed that Bethel's

"National party candidate Jim Musson shot himself in the foot by referring to NAIT several times as the U of A" evasiveness had been a recurring event throughout the campaign. The Edmonton East Liberals, however, chose to attack the organizers of the forum for not allowing them to use a surrogate speaker from another riding.

One of the highlights of the forum was a heated exchange between incumbent M.P. Ross Harvey and PC challenger Kevin Kovacs. Kovacs, a local businessman, challenged the effectiveness of Harvey's platform manual, and the two candidates exchanged a few verbal jabs. A little later, National party candidate Jim Musson shot himself in the foot by referring to NAIT several times as the U of A. Considering that the forum was held at NAIT, these mistakes were not received well.

The forum itself proved to reinforce the fact that Edmonton East is a very important and hotly contested riding. Encompassing the downtown core, all eastern residential areas, and the industrial areas, there is as much bickering as there is campaigning. Ernst Eder was criticized for putting up signs along streets, and Judy Bethel was accused of putting signs on city property, charges which both candidates deny. Current polls show the Liberals and the Conservatives neck and neck, with the NDP and Reform nipping at their heels. With the importance of this election and the closeness of the Edmonton East race, this contest is shaping up to be one of national interest.

by Christopher M. Hayes

The grudge match is over! The winning streak of SAIT has fallen and NAIT has risen from the ashes to victory. NAIT raised a total of $14,022 for Shinerama while, SAIT only managed $13,000. While raising the money (which goes towards Cystic Fibrosis) was the most important point, there was a very interesting sidebet.

Dean Andres and Trent Phalen agreed that the losing school must perform certain embarrassing acts. For Trent Phalen, VP of Student Affairs, SAIT, this means the loss of hair and bungee jumping in a g-string.

The head shaving party takes place on Friday, October 15 at the Nest around 7:00 PM. There, Trent gets his head shaved, except for the initials NAIT on the back of his head. When contacted Trent said that he would like to be intoxicated for this event and will probably be in the Nest early to sign autographs.

After his head has been shaved, NAITSA officials will parade Trent around Edmonton. The last stop will probably be at the Civil/Office Administration Cabaret.

Then on Saturday morning (a time will be announced later) at the wave pool in West Edmonton Mall, Trent must bungee jump wearing a g-string.

A special thanks from Dean Andres to all those who helped out during Shinerama and allowed him to keep his hair!

AIDS Quiz Results

Answers...

1. AIDS is transmitted by unprotected hetero- and homosexual sex

Not by giving blood, hugging a person with HIV or AIDS or mosquito bites.

2. Not everyone that tests positive for HIV will develop full-blown AIDS.

3. Although things such as Hepatitis, mumps and other communicable diseases are transmitted by actions such as sharing a coffee cup, AIDS is not.

4. The safest condoms to use are latex, pre-lubricated with Nonoxynol 9, although abstinence is the only sure way to not contract AIDS sexually.

AIDS WALK FOR LIFE

The AIDS network issued an apology for the confusion surrounding the AIDS Walk challenge between GMCC and NAIT. The challenge was neither accepted nor issued by NAIT or NAITSA, and NAITSA feels bad about the confusion.

As it was - thanks to all students and staff that participated in the walk, as well as to the cooking and EMT students that played a role "behind the scenes"

Academic Council Meeting

by Rosie Polachuk

The first official meeting of the Academic Council was held October sixth in the Governor's Board Room. The academic council consists of students, instructors, and NAIT Executives. The purpose of this council is to review, discuss, amend, and implement NAIT policies and procedures dealing with academics.

The two hour meeting dealt with topics such as student complaints, student loan payments, academic dishonesty, and student level english competency. Guest speakers reported on studies and surveys currently being tabulated for review at the next Academic Council meeting.

The student members on this council are appointed by general council and must be voted into these positions. If you have any concerns that you would like to discuss with the Academic Council please drop by the NAITSA offices for more information.

Aboriginal Student's Club Notes

by Nicole Gutowski

NAIT's Aboriginal Students Club had the pleasure of meeting with the president of Ooskipukwa, Clayton Blood, on Friday afternoon. Clayton Blood, a former CBC news broadcaster, spent the afternoon with the club discussing the infrastructure of his organization as well as student opportunities.

Ooskipukwa, a cree word for a new bud or new growth, is a native owned, non-profit organization managed and supported by the First Nations Resource Council in Alberta. Its function is to review, restructure and develop business proposal submitted by native communities.

Interestingly enough, the information needed is researched and analyzed by students selected by Ooskipukwa based on their qualifications and suitability for the project. The projects range from management and community development, to legal research and technical assistance. In order to appreciate and fully understand native social and environmental concerns, the student is required to live in the native community for a period of 16 weeks. During this time, the student is able to apply his/her academic strengths in real life situations. Non-native students are given valuable insight into aboriginal culture and concerns. Native students are given the ability to exercise change in a culture experiencing economic difficulty.

So we see that not only does Ooskipukwa serve as a bridge to cross-cultural awareness through knowledge, (which is evidently their motto - Power through Knowledge) but it also serves as a base for self sustainability in native communities. Organizations like Ooskipukwa are invaluable, but they are only a step towards achieving our goals, the rest is up to us. ☸

Scene of The Crime

Organized by NAIT Facilities Management Security

"Scene of the Crime" is a new column to allow you, as students, to not only become aware of the various perpetration's occurring on Campus, but to allow you to take an active roll in putting a stop to crime.

Thefts have been a major problem on Campus this past month. A bicycle was stolen from a bicycle rack near the Mechanical Technologies Building.

Two lockers were broken into by having the locks cut. Students are advised to use only short shackle locks or hardened steel shackles on their lockers.

A vehicle was stolen from S Parking Lot and another vehicle was entered, resulting in the contents being stolen. To prevent thefts from vehicles, insure that you place all valuables out of sight by locking them in your trunk.

There was also a wallet stolen from the South Cafeteria. To prevent these thefts, do not leave your property unattended at any time. It only takes a thief a few seconds to remove your wallet, purse or back pack.

Don't become a victim of opportunity — help us Prevent Crime. If you witness any crime or have information, call 471-7477. ☸

Information Too Slow

On October 1st, 1993 as I was walking across the field beside parking lot 'S', I witnessed two people breaking into a truck. I immediately went over to the main entrance of NAIT, to the information counter. I informed the woman at the window that someone was breaking into a truck in the parking lot in section S. She told me to step next door to the Parking Office. I went in and the woman in the office was typing with her back turned to me. I waited a few moments until the woman turned around and then informed her of the same thing. She told me I would have to go to the parking security office. I didn't know where this was, so she started to give me directions. One of the ladies from the information desk then told me to use their phone and dial the security office. So I used their phone and told the woman from parking security the same thing. She did not bother to ask me if I had a description, she just said "We'll send somebody over there right away", and hung up.

My concern is this; The first person I spoke to, should have been able to handle the situation. She should have picked up her phone and dialed the Parking Security herself. If not that, then the lady in the Parking Office should have done the same. I'm sure if I had come and told either one of them that it was their care being broken into, they would have reacted much faster.

I don't know if the two guys breaking into that black truck were caught or if they had enough time to get away. I'm sure the owner would no be impressed to know that someone had witnessed the break-in, and reported it, but the women at the 'information' window were not prepared to handle that kind of situation. I wonder, would the same thing have happened if I had come in to report someone being raped in the parking lot?

Thanks For Nothing

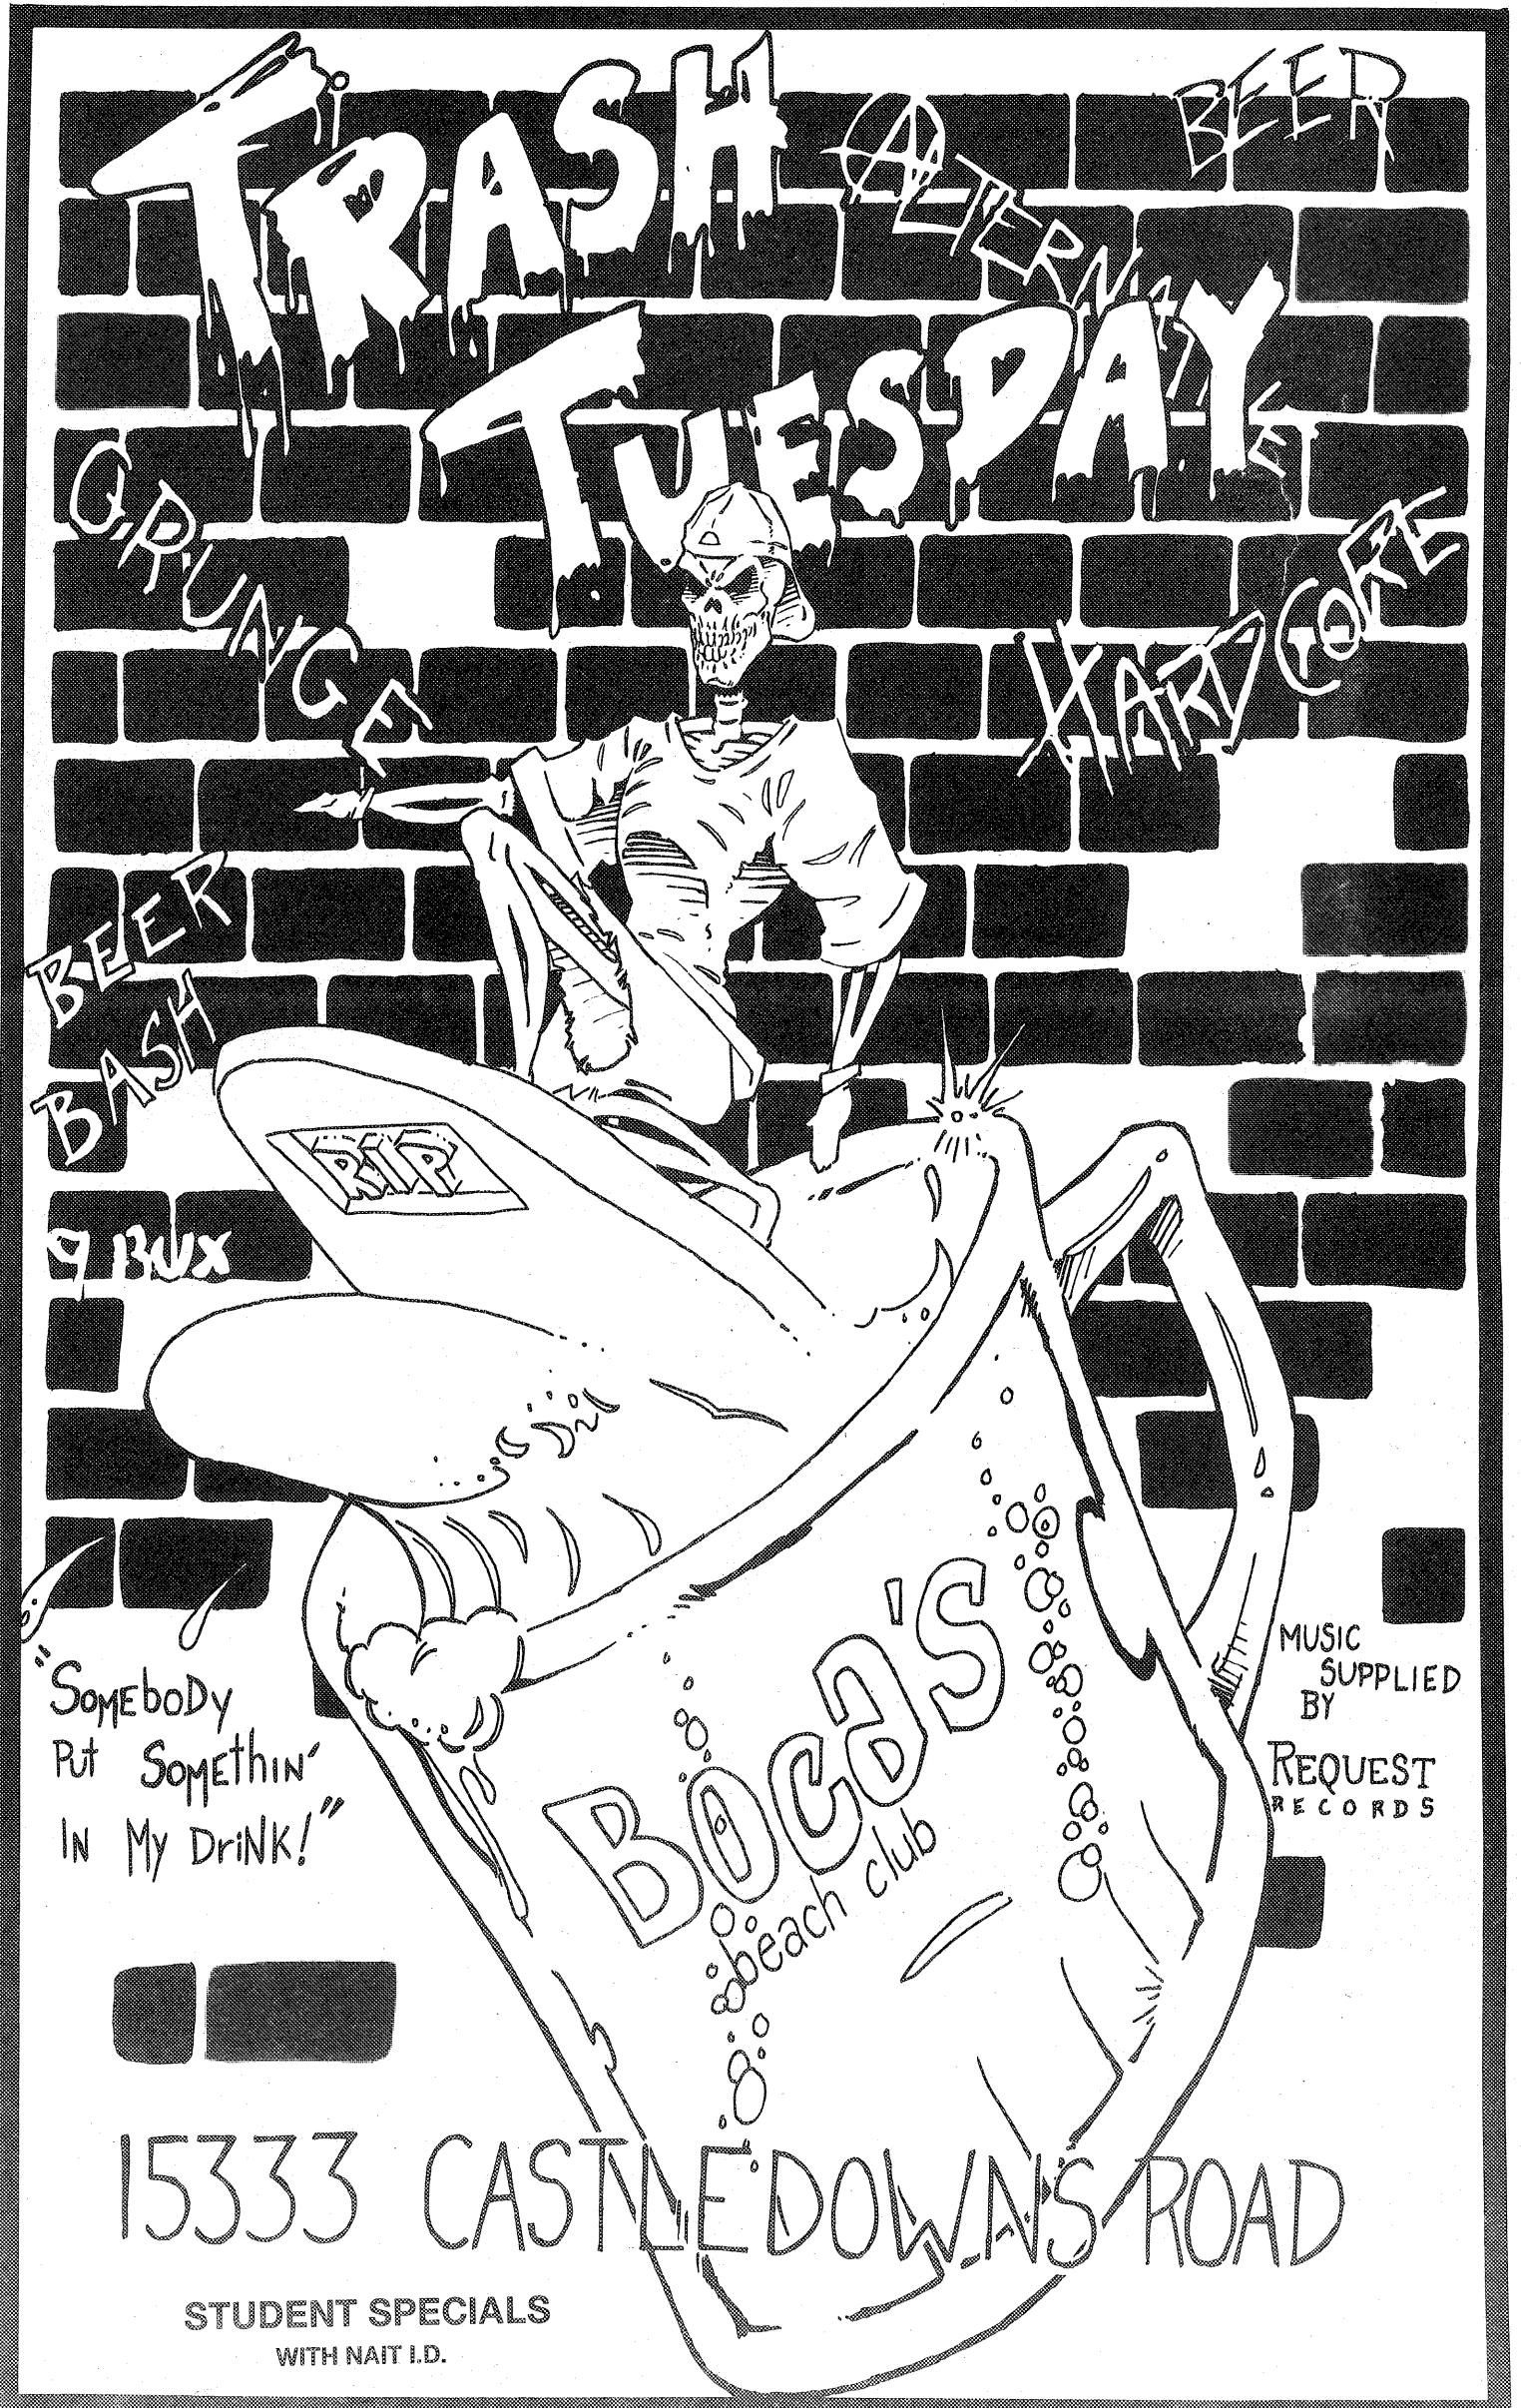

NAITSA sponsored a short story contest during the Week of Welcome — write a story about the NAIT OOK, and you could win a Sony Discman. As it happened, I was the only person that entered the contest with a short story. And as it turned out, NAITSA would not award the Discman to the author of the single entry. A fellow classmate took this concern to the NAITSA office, and it was quickly taken care of. Amanda Steenwinkle (Our esteemed Activities VP.) ran out and spoke with me for the reasoning behind their decisions. What she DID do, however, was award me a card for a free CD at Kingsway HMV (Now all I have to do is buy a CD player for myself, as I'm borrowing my brother's; Geez, it's almost like winning Turtle Wax for a vehicle you don't own...<grin>).

I'd like to thank Amanda for her thoughtfulness in taking the time to explain their side of the argument, as well as Jana Kolot for taking this concern to NAITSA in the first place. Amanda said the contest >MIGHT< be run again in January, so any other writers (Are there any out there?), jump in, get a chance to win the Discman, and have some fun slandering (Sorry, I mean writing about...) the NAIT OOK. ☹

sports editor

Well, well, well ... Guess who just won the A.L. Pennant for the second straight year? A lot of people said the Blue Jays couldn't repeat, but now they have the best chance since the 77-78 Yankees to repeat as World Series champs. It makes me feel good to see the Jays successfully trounce the Chicago White Sox; not only because so many people thought it was cool to bash the Toronto boys, but because George Bell plays for the Sox. Remember how George used to tell everybody how great he was while he was ruining the Jays' team chemistry? It was satisfying to see him eat crow after claiming the Jays weren't that good, and that the Sox would win. Bo Jackson had an appropriately anemic series, and the Sox bullpen collapsed when needed most. Down one run in the ninth, the Sox' relievers allowed the Jays to cash in three to cement a 6-3 victory. I only hope the officials in Toronto find a sense of humor and fly the American flag upside-down... On the hockey front, it seems that the Oilers DO like NAIT students. After a recent editorial in which I criticized the Oilers' organization for turning away the Nugget's request for access to their games, Oilers' director of PR Bill Tuele contacted me to express that he was "... disturbed" to hear that we felt that way. It seems that there was a misunderstanding in our communications. An assistant told us that the Nugget did not qualify for accreditation, but according to Tuele that is not the case. Mr. Tuele expressed regret that the entire event unfolded in this way, and invited the Nugget to cover future Oilers games. And so, to make a long story short, you will be happy to know that the Nugget will now be covering the Oilers as well as the Eskimos and the many OOKS sports teams. And while we're on the subject of the Oil, when is the last time you've heard so much optimistic talk about our hockey team? We may not be a threat for the Stanley Cup, but this is going to be an entertaining team. I think that the days of boring games are over; now, all Tuele and the Oilers need to do is get the fans back into the arena, and hope that the Northlands mess gets sorted out without more public bloodshed. Our inaugural game to cover is this Saturday vs. the Vancouver Canucks at 6 PM. It should be a great game, and we will have the story (and hopefully pictures) for next week. Until then, why not watch the Jays win a World Series game or two...

Editor's note: Since this article was written it has been brought to my attention that it is the Oilers' policy that all photos be taken by the team photographer. As a result, we won't be able to carry photos in next week's Nugget - TL ☺

Stallone Demolished

by Christopher M. Hayes

The new action film, Demolition Man, opened last Thursday and "Wow!" what a movie. After climbing off the top charts with his last movie "Cliffhanger", Sylvester Stallone delivers another incredible movie. He had major help from Wesley Snipes, last seen in Passenger 57; Stallone plays a cop who has a talent for blowing things up. Snipes is the bad guy and he plays the part convincingly. The two are freeze dried for their respective crimes (Snipes' were intentional, Stallone was framed).

The two are de-thawed in 2037, a future where the cops are pansies and you get a ticket for language violation. There is little crime in this "utopia" until Snipes gets free and performs a lot of murder-death-kills. Stallone gets the fun job of capturing the bad guy for a second time.

However, while Snipes and Stallone were on ice, their psyches were being rehabilitated by a mind control device. Snipes was given "accidentally" expert guerrilla training, expert martial arts, expert hacker, and expert murder-death-kill skills. Stallone, on the other hand was given advanced knitting techniques.

The abundance of sight gags and the overall humor of the movie gave it the feel of the "Last Action Hero", and in fact there is an off-hand reference to President Schwartzanegger.

Unfortunately, this movie is pretty easy to follow and doesn't have much in the way of socially redeeming qualities, but hey this is a Stallone movie, or should I say a Snipes movie? Watch out for Wesley Snipes, he is going to be a major player in movies in the years to come. ☺

The Dream Is Dead

by Terry Larose

This past week, the world was robbed of one of its heroes. Michael Jordan prematurely ended his spectacular career while still on the top of the heap, leaving all to wonder what might have been and to speculate on the many possible reasons he had to quit this early. This event will have a far greater impact than the considerable shock waves felt throughout professional basketball. In this week of practically no OOKS sports events, I hope you all can forgive me for running off at the mouth a bit on the end of an era in basketball. I think it will affect all of us, even those who are not die-hard hoop fans.

My life, as well as the lives of millions of people all over the world, have been influenced by the man from Wilmington, North Carolina with the unique ability to perform miracles on the hardwood. When Magic Johnson and Larry Bird were waging their wars in the first years of the 80's, I was not yet an NBA fan. The intricacies of pinpoint passing and deadly shooting that Bird & Magic epitomized were lost on me. It was not until 1983, when a high-flying college sophomore on Dean Smith's North Carolina team caught my eye, that I became interested in basketball. I can still remember announcers like Dick Vitale just saying things like "how does he DO that??" with puzzled looks on their faces as Jordan would sweep in and jam over two or three defenders.

I was not alone in my amazement. As MJ moved on to the NBA his amazing skills attracted the attention of millions. Fans like me all over the world watched his dunking duels with Dominique Wilkins, the Bulls' struggles with the Detroit Pistons, and finally Chicago's triumphant 1991 World Championship. Since '91, the Bulls have not let go on their hold on NBA power, and this is mostly due to Michael Jordan's least talked about trait: his incredible work ethic.

Jordan will never be remembered as a workmanlike player, but the truth of the matter is that Jordan is the best because he hustles and works harder than any player in history. Simply consider his improvement over his career. After already being the best player in the league, Jordan went out and worked on his defense until he was the best defender in the world. As soon as critics pointed at outside shooting as Jordan's achilles' heel, MJ turned himself into a deadly 3-point shooting machine. At the end of his career, Michael Jordan was still the best player in the world in almost every category, and that is the real tragedy here; that the greatest player in history is taking his curtain call when the show is only half over.

Imagine that Nolan Ryan had retired in 1977 - how many exciting performances, (not to mention no-hitters) would the world have missed. What if Hank Aaron had retired after 500 home runs? How about Joe Montana? He could have retired after 2 Super Bowls straight into the hall of fame. These examples pale in comparison to Jordan's situation. Michael is in his prime, his team is extremely strong, and chances are he would collect several more championships before his skills eroded. Why then is the best player in the world calling it quits at the pinnacle of his career?

There is no doubt that the lion's share of Jordan's decision to retire is based largely on the unanswered questions surrounding his father's death. Still unknown is whether or not James Jordan's killers realized who they were robbing. Until that is known, the possibility that his father was killed because of Michael's fame must weigh heavily on MJ's mind. As well, because of the incredible fame, the Jordan family was closer than most. The father-son bond was especially strong. James was a regular at Bulls' games, and by Jordan's own admission the thought of a season without his father at courtside was a painful one.

I really don't think that the common reasons mentioned (1) that Jordan is leaving because of money and (2) he is leaving while he is on top, are valid ones. Jordan makes more money than he could ever spend, and he is so competitive that I find it hard to believe that he could just walk away voluntarily from a challenge.

Speculation, however, is useless. Jordan is gone, and I don't think he'll return. I can wish all I want, but Michael's mind is made up and I think he'll just disappear for awhile. Unfortunately, I believe this sets us up for some psychos believing they can control sports figures by going after their families. I hope it doesn't happen, but some nut is liable to try something stupid.

And so Michael Jordan goes off into history, his head hung in mourning, leaving behind him unprecedented accomplishments: a lock on the scoring championship, one of three 3-peat champions in history, the most dominant guard to ever play the game, and most of all, his MVP trophies.

Michael Jordan was, and is, an MVP in life as well as in basketball. He gave so much time and effort to charity that it may have contributed to the incredible stress he felt, yet he continued to give. Jordan changed our world in ways most of us do not even consider. Are you wearing Nike shoes right now? If not for Michael Jordan and Spike Lee's commercials and the millions of sales they generated, you might be wearing Reeboks or Converse shoes. Jordan changed the way products are marketed to you, simply by proving the viability of big-money sports endorsements based on personality. Also consider the fact that Jordan opened many doors by becoming the first black athlete to completely dominate the endorsement field. Bo Jackson, Deion Sanders, and Shaquille O'Neal all owe their big. The true tragedy of this whole series of events is that the greatest player of all time leaves the game he loves under a dark cloud of unhappiness. We, the fans, are left with an empty feeling of loss, like a family member has died before we had a chance to say goodbye. We are left to contemplate what might have been, and to remember a career that packed 20 years worth of memories and highlights into 10 years. In the end, maybe it's better just to remember Michael Jordan as an incredible athlete, not as a person whose personal life was destroyed in a tragic display of the power of fame to invade a celebrity's privacy. ☹

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

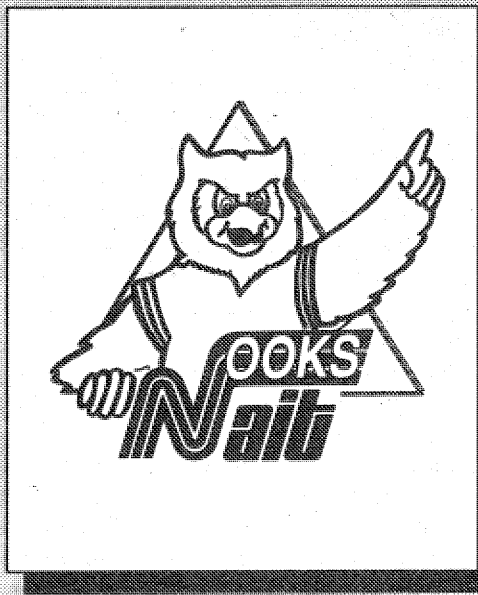

Women's Soccer

Susan Locket

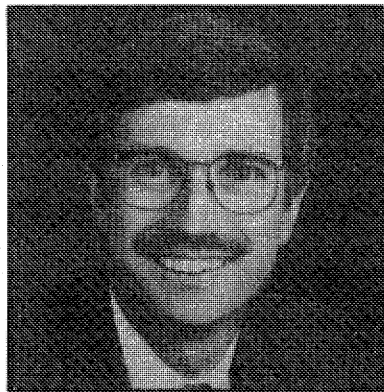

Susan is the co-captain. She plays fullback and stopper in the OOK defensive system. She is a tough hand player who never quits. She played an outstanding game against McEwen to inspire her team to a great victory. Congratulations Susan.

Men's Golf

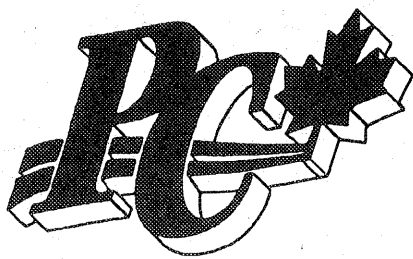

Jerrid Pasitney

Jerrold's outstanding play, rounds of 74-74 were a big factor in NAIT winning the championship. His 148 total placed him 3rd in the individual standings. Jerrold was a member of last year's bronze medal winning team. Congratulations.

Dream Analysis with Dr Grunwald

As you know, I Dr. Grunwald, am a semi-certified practitioner of the almost accepted and nearly respected dream analysis technique. All I need to analyse a dream is a few notes on the dream jotted down. This week's letter is from U. Blow Marsupials in Hamapamapolupo Hawaii, who keeps having this nightmare:

Oh baby you're so hot what's that perfume, A535?

Let's start a family together What? Drop dead? Well OK, but how 'bout some lovin' first? Ow, you didn't have to kick me hello mister bouncer what, no problems over here oh you mean get out, yeah right Hey I was only kidding Geez you broke my arm fine who needs you

Oh hello officer no I haven't been drinking Whaddaya mean blow into this tube? whoa, isn't jail a bit drastic? man what a night huh - glad to meet you too, Bubba what, I look cute? why thanks. you want me to get you the soap?... Uh-oh AAARRRRGGGGHHHH

The Doctor's analysis: Your underwear is on too tight.

If you have a dream or nightmare you just can't understand, why not send your notes on it into the good doctor so he can laugh at — I mean analyse it. All letters are held in strict privacy. No, really. I'm not kidding.

Ask Mr Advice Guy

Dear Mr. Advice Guy,

I have what is, I'm sure, a fairly common problem namely, I can never seem to remember peoples names. This gets very awkward when it comes time to make introductions. We're not just talking about new acquaintances here, no, I've managed to forget close friends, family and even on occasion my own name. What would you suggest?

Signed,
Fairly Forgetful

Dear Fairly,

There are several possible solutions to your problem, you could

1. Spend money on a course designed to improve your memory
2. Become a hermit thereby avoiding introductions
3. Use the M.A.G. method*

*M.A.G. stands for Mr. Advice Guy - get with it!

Simply put, never use names conversationally. Friends and acquaintances will soon get used to the fact that you refer to them by generic nicknames such as buddy, chuckster, chuckles, lucky, spawnly or practically anything ending in a y. Here's a classic generic conversation to get you started:

"Hey man, how ya doin'?", "How're things?", "So, you still working at the same place?", "You and, uh, you know, still seeing each other?"

People love it when you ask them questions about their life, so much so that they won't notice that you haven't used their name once. If you are with someone else at the time, after several such non specific questions they should get the hint and introduce themselves, if not find people to associate with that are a little quicker on the uptake. ☺

Butt-Naked Hi Jinx

by S. Gett

Zucchini Mama is hot, zucchini mama is sexy, zucchini mama is funny, unfortunately zucchini mama is also over. For those who are a little confused so far, zucchini mama is the title of the latest show by Three Dead Trolls in a Baggie & Jr. Gone Wild. I caught Saturday's mid-night show of zucchini madness, 90 minutes of alternating butt naked hi jinx either 3 Dead Trolls and ass kickin' music with Jr. Gone Wild (in miniskirts mind you) what more could you ask for, for the paltry sum of $10. But wait, there's more! Would you believe performance art involving phallic surgery, a song entitled "Jesus was a cowboy" and Wes Borg as God? Needless to say, it was hysterically funny.

Even though you missed Zucchini Mama, you can catch their next show, "A Fistful of Loonies" featuring the sinister, and quite possibly evil Dana Anderson. Described as a comic rock opera, this one should be interesting. ☺

Pet Shop Boys - Very

Pet Shop Boys have a new release called "Very." It's very typical, not very exciting, all in all, it's very average.

Verdict: Thumbs down

Curve - Cuckoo

In the promo package they promised that Curve has a reputation for gothic rock and that they sound like a cross between Sonic Youth and Ministry. More like Sonic Youth and your local minister.

Verdict: Nothing special

Wade Free Vancouver - The Club Grotesque Compilation

$7.99 new, that's how much this little gem costs. 18 indie bands from Vancouver got together at Club Grotesque to cut this disc and it's well worth your time (and $8) to listen to. You may not like every track but, with action like Lung's "F-k Generator", or Sourpuss' "Filth", you'll find something for your taste.

Verdict: great bargain, thumbs up
Best Track: Feed your Babyhead
- "Psychic Adrenalin"

Me Mom and Morgantaler - Shiva Space Machine

Shiva Space Machine is Montreal's Me, Mom & Morgantaler's latest CD. With the price of discs these days I'm always hesitant to plop down 20-25$ for a disc, but in this case it was well worth the beans. Every song a possible classic - well okay I'm exaggerating but, there isn't a single one on here that I don't like. Active, crazy, politically conscious (everybody's got aids) the best damn accordion dance band on the planet. Unfortunately, due to its publication date, it's too late for you to attend the antics of the band on Thursday night at the Bronx. I will tell you how much fun I had next issue though.

Back to the disc-mini-review...

Great value
big fun
best song: I don't want to be your friend verdict: Thumbs up

Moshfest '93

by Christopher M. Hayes

Over 2500 people showed up at the Agricom on Saturday October 9th for this year's Moshfest. The annual event, which is usually staged at the Butter dome, was moved to the Agricom to better facilitate the increase in population. With the increase of space, there was plenty of room for the merchants. Some of the more noticeable displays were from Greenpeace, Amnesty International, AIDS network, and Albertans for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

There was the usual tattoo/branding/body piercing salon in the middle of one of the bays. There were four ramps set up for skate boarding, as well as several tennis nets strung up for competition hackey-sacking.

Two different salons were set up for hair care treatments, although this basically meant shaving your head. Also, there were two beer tents set up for those patrons who were of age. Unfortunately, several patrons couldn't handle their alcohol and had to be escorted out by the police.

The headline band 'SNFU' could not attend because they forgot to get on the plane. The other four main bands easily carried the evening. The Loved One, Disciples of Power, King Apparatus, and The Cadillac Tramps each had an hour gig. The crowds went wild with each song and a new mosh "pit" was created for each song. There were a small number of injuries, but that is to be expected when you go to the Moshfest.

A Short Poem

by Tra Nosinbar

I went to the store the other day
I bought a bran muffin, I wasn't feeling o.k

The clerk was rude, asked "why the bran"

I said I can't go, but with bran I can
He said O

I said A

He said "Here's some free ex-lax have a nice day."
