ALBERTA ABORTIONS

By: Julie Matthews

There's only one hospital clinic in Edmonton that performs abortions. The Royal Alex has a month-long waiting list and has had to cut back on other reproductive services to meet the demand.

"Because of the lack of access in Northern Alberta, one of our new focuses has become pregnancy choices, including therapeutic abortion services," says Cheryl MacKay, director of the Women's Reproductive Health Centre at the hospital.

"There are so many women who want to have abortions and there's so little time to get them in that patients dealing with infertility or sexually transmitted diseases are referred elsewhere." MacKay says the clinic is limited by provincial government cuts to staff and funding.

Statistics Canada figures show Alberta is in sync with the national growing abortion rate. Pro-life and pro-choice groups agree the increase is a result of high unemployment and a bad economy. They also worry that abortion is being used as a form of birth control.

In 1992, 100 497 Canadian women had abortions, a 5.7% increase from 1991. The national abortion rate almost doubled between 1972 and 1992, to 25.3 for every 100 live births.

"This is a national tragedy," said Susan McNeely of Campaign Life, an anti-abortion group. "We should all be in mourning." MacKay said some women simply can't cope with the financial strain of an unplanned pregnancy, though most are easily able to pay for birth control. Many young women simply put off going to the facility fee of between $375 and $600 a year, depending on the stage of the pregnancy. It's more expensive than the hospitals but has fewer restrictions.

The Royal Alex limits abortions to women who are 12 weeks pregnant or less. But the waiting list means many women are out of luck by the time their name reaches the top. The Edmonton Morgentaler Clinic will do abortions up to 16 weeks.

And the one in Calgary will do the procedure up to 19 weeks but the fee is $800.

Susan Fox, the executive director at the Morgentaler

Clinic says money usually isn't a problem. "If someone wants one, they're going to do whatever they have to do."

"It's not up to us to judge whether abortion is being used as birth control or not, Fox said. "For most countries in the world, abortion is the only method of birth control they have. Nobody wants to have an abortion, but if it turns out a woman does have an unplanned pregnancy it's not unrealistic for her to look at abortion as an option."

Liz McCord from Planned Parenthood, suggests governments should provide free birth control pills and condoms to help curtail the rising abortion rate.

doctor until it's too late.

Most of the women who come to the Royal Alex for an abortion are single, between 20 and 30 and work full-time. But married women accounted for 18% of hospital abortions in Alberta in 1992. MacKay said most married women that come in are immigrants who are financially just scraping by.

"Some of these people, they're struggling with two, or even with one child already," MacKay explained. The reproductive centre is often the first choice for women because everything is covered by Alberta Health.

However, at the Morgentaler clinics women pay a

Computerized Car Pooling

By: Neil Feser

An average of six hundred students at NAIT each year are turned away when applying for a parking space. This leads to a lot of congestion in the residential areas surrounding NAIT and numerous parking tickets. More and more cars are ticketed and towed each year around NAIT, and at Kingsway Garden Mall. What are we to do with all the people who need to drive and cannot find space to park their vehicles?

One answer to this annual dilemma is the recently instituted ride-share program, through NAIT parking and security.

Every year NAIT facilities management attends a conference with other western Canadian schools. Some of these include University of Calgary, SAIT, University of Winnipeg, Red Deer College and Simon Fraser University, from B.C.

In 1992, Simon Fraser University (SFU) started a computerized ride-share program, in which students enter car pools by entering their names and addresses on a central computer. They were then matched with people living in the same area as themselves.

In the first year of operation, 100 carpools were formed using the new system. In 1993, 213 carpools were formed. Expectations are for even greater numbers this year.

Following the same general principle, NAIT facilities in conjunction with NAIT student services, purchased the software needed to start a ride-share program here. The software comes from a B.C. company and cost about $2,500. Using equipment already available here, NAIT facilities then acquired the Canada Post software required to put all the pertinent postal codes on-line. This cost another $500-$1000.

The ride-share program matches students with other people in the same general area on a number of different options, including male or female only, if desired, smoking and non-smoking, and whether or not you wish to be a driver, passenger only, or both.

By setting up a car pool of at least three people, NAIT parking guarantees you a parking stall. To accommodate this they have leased an extra forty stall lost between NAIT and the municipal airport.

To date, there have been 112 car pools formed, which compares favorably with the numbers provided by SFU. There were no formal data collections made on the number of car pools previous to the implementation of this program.

In order to register for the ride-share program, a student uses his/her student ID card in the card reader in front of the registrar's office. Then follow the instructions on the computer screen.

Hopefully this program will help improve the parking situation around NAIT, and it can only help the environment. By reducing the number of vehicles driving we clean up the air, and save on gas.

For extra information, you can contact the ride-share coordinator, parking services, NAIT, or call 471-7539.

STUDENT DEBT

By: Julie Matthews

Alberta students might forget about University or College all together or be overburdened with debt when they graduate if a new federal proposal goes through, says provincial Advanced Education Minister Jack Ady.

"I don't think we should be moving in a direction that could cause students to be loaded up with $50,000 and $60,000 of debt at the end of their university. You're going to find them shying away and not wanting to attend," Ady said.

The federal government has proposed cutting the cash portion of its transfer payments to provinces to cover education costs, which in Alberta totals about $260 million. Instead, the money would go to an expanded loan program for students.

Ady said that could mean more students eligible for more money to cover more of their education, saddling them with bigger debts. The federal government has suggested loan repayments be tied to income after graduation.

"I don't see it as a benefit to the students, I don't see it as a benefit to the taxpayer," said Ady, who wants to know how the money would be put back into the system.

The suggestion is part of a federal discussion paper released Wednesday about reforming social security in Canada.

The federal education proposals follow revelations last month that the province plans to change its policies to let universities and college increase tuition fees.

The province would remove its cap on the percentage of education costs post-secondary institutions can take from students.

Social Services Minister Mike Cardinal said he backs many of the federal suggestions regarding social programs, which appear to mirror much of what Alberta has already done - cut administration, put people into education and retraining and direct the money to those most in need.

Premier Ralph Klein said earlier that he's not concerned about a potential cut in federal transfer payments. "if we have to accept a cut in transfer payments, we will only do so if government can demonstrate that it's ready, willing and able to reduce costs on the administration side", said Klein.

Klein said the province isn't afraid of taking on new programs or relinquishing some to the federal government as long as they're administered by whoever can do them best and cheapest.

Interim Liberal leader Bettie Hewes said she favored some of the federal suggestions, such as a two-tiered unemployment system that would put frequent users into retraining.

But she shared some of Ady's concerns about introducing a student loan program that could force students to take out loans they can't afford to pay back.

Letters...

Dear Editor,

The following is in response to Monica Parker, who wrote about her difficulties finding creationist literature without having the expense of purchasing it.

Monica, about the NAIT library not carrying any creationist literature - of course they don't. They also don't carry anything on Islam, Hindu or Judaism. Anyone who has taken a library tour (It's required by almost every first year) knows that the library doesn't carry anything that is not directly related to the courses offered - and even then they don't always have anything. Since there are no courses in Creationism or pre-darwinism it would be impossible to find any material on it here.

Secondly, are you stupid or just brain dead? There are other libraries in the city. There are three that I can think of that more than likely carry the material you seek:

- 1) King's College
- 2) Public Library
- 3) University Library (probably Rutherford)

Amazing as it may sound, ask the staff at the bookstore(s) that you've been frequenting, they may know some other places that you can look.

Lastly, you sound as if you believe that you're being persecuted for your religious beliefs. Try this - if you have to talk about your faith, do it in such a manner as to not sound like you're trying to convert everyone. Oh, about your virginity - Who cares? You neither have to broadcast nor defend it.

Nobody can live your life but you.

I hope this helps you with your quest and obvious stress in your life.

Swamping Students

As a NAIT student, when you finally enter the working world you will soon discover that companies today are encouraging group rather than individual work. This is the current trend in companies today. And a class of Business students found this out through a technique called "swampwalking".

Organizational Behavior is a course Business students know very well. Its purpose is to teach the complexities of the internal operations of a company and the interpersonal relations within it. Now, each instructor of this course is at liberty to use different methods to try and encourage the "team building" aspect. Bill Fricker is one such instructor who decided to use the swampwalking method.

Using "swamp skis" built by Dave Hoy and Mark Bosworth, the students trekked across the swamp (the grassy knoll of the Tower) in search of different objects they had to recover in order to be successful. There were, however, certain obstacles they had to overcome. Some students were forced to wear blindfolds and use kazoos to communicate because of the "swamp conditions". As you can see on the front page, when students are strapped to a pair of two-by-fours it can be a little tough to stay on your feet.

"It's good to have an instructor who makes a class like this interesting," said Patrick Armstrong, one of Fricker's students.

This idea, however, is not Fricker's. Swampwalking was used this summer for NAIT's staff training seminar.

CQI (Continuous Quality Improvement) is an increasingly popular philosophy used in more and more organizations, and has been adopted by NAIT to keep pace with today's business world. "Quality at NAIT has always been a concern for management and instructional staff," says Fricker, who is Chairperson of NAIT's Educational Technology Advisory Group (ETAG). "Some of the courses we've been able to take recently offer us new techniques to ensure the quality will continue." Swampwalking follows the CQI idea of strengthening team building, to increase the productivity of the group.

As a NAIT student if you haven't heard of CQI it would be a good idea to find out about it. Your future employer will probably be impressed.

As for the students in Fricker's class, who ever said Business didn't know how to have a good time? OK, maybe Civil has but I won't get into that.

Quest for Breasts

Okay, so the title is "slightly" misleading as to the context of my editorial. This is to discuss a problem that faces every woman alive, breast cancer. One in nine Canadian women develop breast cancer and fifteen women die each day in Canada from this disease.

The cause of breast cancer is, as is the case with nearly all cancers, not known. However, there are some factors that definitely influence a person's susceptibility. For example, women are one hundred times more likely to develop breast malignancies than men are, and there is fairly good evidence that it is hereditary. It is also a statistical fact that women who have had children before age 25 have a lower incidence of breast cancer than those whose children come later, but it is not known why.

There are several fairly good signs. Nipple discharge or crusting is very important and should never be ignored. Breast examinations should be carried out at least once a month and any unusual lump or mass should be immediately examined by a physician. Confirmed malignancies should be promptly exercised.

The most common treatment has been and still is total mastectomy - complete removal of the breast and its attendant lymph nodes.

However, even with such radical surgery, fewer than half of the patients survive more than 10 years, and the statistic can be matched with much less radical surgery. One technique used with success has been to cut below the breast and skin it, then remove the offending tissue beneath and take out the necessary lymph nodes. The entire area can then be reconstructed, and when the skin is placed back down over the newly molded breast, all normal external sensations will still be there. Another, even simpler, procedure is known as a lumpectomy (removal of just the malignant lump). Many surgeons insist that this is not the treatment of choice, but statistical evidence indicates that these less-radical procedures produce survival rates as high as total mastectomy and both recovery rate and life quality are certainly better.

So what can you do to help? The Honda Run for the Cure is a good start. The Honda Run helps to raise money for breast cancer research. On Sunday, October 23 at 10:00 am, you have a choice between a 5 km run or a 1 km walk. You can compete individually or as a group. Registration and sponsorship forms are available at the NAITSA office located at E-133, or at the parking office.

No More O.J.

Just when you thought it was all over, and he was guilty, they prolong the agony even more.

O.J. Simpson's lawyers waged another losing battle to throw out evidence and the sister of Simpson's slain ex-wife suggested for the first time she has questions about his innocence. No really!!

"If O.J. is so innocent, why are they trying to suppress all the evidence?" Denise Brown asked after the court session.

Simpson entered a plea of "absolutely 100% not guilty" in the deaths of his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman. But Denise says, "He's 100% innocent? Keep the evidence then."

Brown and other family members have sat through most of the hearings in the murder case. But this was the first time any member of Simpson's family has hinted at his/her view.

The point behind last Wednesday's hearing was similar to others. It was a new effort by the defense to keep out of the trial such evidence as analysis of blood drops found on the driveway of Simpson's mansion and items seized from his vehicle.

Both sides also accused each other of using lying witnesses, but Judge Lance Ito said no one knows yet who is lying and who is telling the truth.

Ito said the defense had an opportunity during the preliminary hearing over the summer to find out if Detective Philip Vannatter lied when he said officers tried to call Simpson before entering his estate without a search warrant.

The judge said state law allows the defense only one chance to seek suppression of evidence-either at the preliminary hearing or later in Superior Court. And they chose to fight at the preliminary hearing.

However, defense lawyer, Gerald Velmen, insisted new evidence has surfaced showing Vannatter lied when he testified about the circumstances under which police entered the estate. He cited cellular phone records and communication transcripts.

What they presented at the hearing was a well-orchestrated tissue of lies," Velmen said.

In another ruling against the defense, Ito upheld the testing of blood found on Simpson's driveway. Velmen said the tests invaded Simpson's privacy and police should have had a search warrant. The judge said the argument was "interesting and novel" but unsupported in the law.

Jury selection for the trial is still continuing. They've taken a week's break to allow the lawyers time to read more than 300 questionnaires filled out by prospective jurors.

President's Corner

Dean Andres

With the announcement of the new 9.9 million expansion to NAIT's main campus, everyone is talking. The 5500 square metre building will satisfy a number of critical needs: instructional space, an auditorium, lecture and seminar theatres, student support services, and amenities such as a new bookstore.

Since the government is unable to provide funding for any new construction, NAIT has to look for other resources. Specifically, these funds will come from the following three sources:

1. Partners in Tomorrow Campaign
2. Capital reserves developed over the past decade
3. Expected new corporate and private donations

This is where we as students play a big part. In 1989, the NAIT Students' Association (NAITSA), started allocating $15.00 from each student fee towards a future building fund. In 1990, the NAIT Foundation embarked on the Partners in Tomorrow Campaign where NAITSA pledged to donate $15.00 from every student fee for the next five years. Combined with interest the total pledge was estimated to reach $775,000.00.

The maturity date for the NAIT Foundation Reserve is October 15, 1994 and the amount sitting in the fund is $608,847.82. Student fee assessments and interest rates were lower than expected with the actual total being $608,847.00 rather than the estimated $775,000.00.

Over the next two meetings, General Council will be discussing the NAIT Foundation Reserve with respect to our pledge in the Partners in Tomorrow Campaign.

I hope to see you all out at General Council on November 1 because your representatives will be voting on whether to continue the contributions for another year.

It is important to remember that funds pledged in the past have benefitted our time at NAIT, and funds pledged in the present will benefit students that follow us. This is an important issue, please take the time to talk about it with your tech rep.

If you have any questions, please give me a call at 471-7608 and I'll see you on November 1.

Spare the Rod....?

To be honest with you, I tried for hours to come up with a topic for this week's editorial that wouldn't offend anyone, or step on anyone's toes. I really tried to come up with a flowery, "do-good" type editorial, but after hours of blank, vegetable-like staring at the walls, I decided to head back out to the edge and be controversial again. To all those people I offend this week...Sorry, I tried.

Who is the idiot that decided telling children something was bad was enough? Who thought up this "time-out" crap, and all the rest of the child psychology garble that has been passed off as discipline for the past generation. Did all of the flower children and baby boomers just collectively decide that their children should become the anti-authority, anarchist youths of today.

I hate to use the cliché, "Spare the rod... spoil the child" but let's take a good look at the kids today who have grown up with "Johnny, do you think that was a very nice thing to do?" How many people remember the old "Don't make me give you something to cry about", or something along those lines? Doesn't it seem like children then knew the limits of their behavior.

Corporal punishment is outlawed in nearly all schools today. Heaven forbid we scar some poor child's mind by torturing him. That traumatic trip to the principal's office could emotionally scar that child forever!!!

I'm not sure if you remember grade school the same way I do, but it seems to me just the threat of "THE STRAP" was enough to scare the hell out of me. The thought of that horrible fate was enough to keep most kids in line.

Then you get the Young Offender's Act. Now, when I was a teenager, we all know this bit of legislation was a joke, but everyone was too well trained by them to try getting out of line too much. These days teenagers don't just know it's a joke, but they act upon it. Most times they just get a lecture and a slap on the wrist, figuratively, not literally. So what's to stop them from doing whatever they want.

I'm not saying we need to beat our kids more, even though I've seen a few who could really use a good beating. Far from it. Think of it this way. You can reason with a three year old until your blue in the face, and he will still do what he wants. Slap his hands a few times, and I'll bet you get his attention.

Society survived for ages with actual spankings and children getting their mouths washed out with soap. Isn't it time we started taking the initiative by bringing our children up properly. Teaching them morals, respect, honesty, and all the other things that make us good people. And if they need a good smack to make them remember it... then give it to them. It's for their own good.

CHRIS' WORLD

By Christopher M. Hayes

So. You've read my rantings and ravings over the past few weeks. I would be lying if I said that some people have come up to me and said "Man, you are weird!" However, I would also be lying if some people haven't also come up to me and said "you know Chris, you sure are weird, but I agree with you on that last comment."

Now seeing as how my editor told me to continue ranting (Actually, I believe he was asleep at his desk when I asked him, but since he didn't seem to mind...)

This week I believe that I will discuss my views on justice, crime, law, and punishment. I don't think anyone who will read this editorial has not been touched by violence. If you disagree, let me ask you, do you lock your doors? Do you walk certain streets at night?

Statistics show that one out of two people will be "touched" by violent crime. Why? Have we fallen so far down that we have to be so afraid of walking the street at night? What has happened to us, as a society? Whatever happened to the lofty ideals set forth by our fore-father? Does anyone remember a certain speech called "I have a dream?" What about the massive peace marches or what about Woodstock?

Woodstock? Why is everyone so friendly during three days every quarter century? Or even Christmas? People are almost always nicer around the holidays? Why?

What makes people do those things that you see on the television? Even Barb Danelesko, the Millwoods house-wife who was murdered by teenagers? Why did she die? For what was her ultimate sacrifice? A couple of bucks? I read about this elderly man in New York that was killed by two children for $3.45; the children were aged 7 and 8.

Have we finally depleted our gene pool? Are the sun's rays burning holes into people's brains? Is it the new math that is causing so much stress to cause people to go out and steal, hurt, beat, rape and kill others?

What about the deterrents to committing crime? Hah. What a joke. Their is no justice anymore. All we do is stuff the guilty into little cages and hope they don't get out for a very long time. Meanwhile the criminals teach each other to be better crooks. But in the meantime, the convicts get three square meals a day, free rent (free if you count being paid in the blood of others), free medical care and free dental care.

It costs the average student around $10,000 a year to attend a post-secondary institution. It costs the tax-payers an average of $50,000 to keep a single prisoner in jail for a year.

A little while ago, at our very own prison, the prisoners went on strike. Wait a minute, on strike! Who do they think they are? In my opinion, as soon as you commit a crime against someone else, you lose all your rights. You lose your rights because when you commit an offense against another human being you take something from them. You take their sense of security and trust away from them.

I say that we should change the prison system. Instead of being above ground, I say that we return to the Middle Ages and build dungeons. Who cares if the prisoners are unhappy? I say that we should re-instate the penalty of "hard labor" and make these convicts repay their debt through sweat and blood.

People got all bent out of shape when that American boy got a punishment of "caning." In some Middle Eastern countries, if you get caught stealing, you lose your hand. Here we put you in a heated cell, give you hot food, take care of you, and then pamper you upon your release. Re-instate torture. Maybe this will deter criminals from committing crimes. If the punishment actually was severe enough it may make criminals think twice about what they are doing.

Enough about prisons and/or justice. Let's talk about some good news, namely the recent hospital cuts. All right. I couldn't be happier. Let's see. There are now only two "real" hospitals left in the city so why bother with any of the workers in the other hospitals. I just hope that I don't ever get in a car accident and live. I think the worst part would be driving from place to place looking for an open emergency ward. And last week when that group of ambulances burnt to the ground, that's just great. I mean, why do we need ambulances any more? There are no doctors, nurses, or beds in the hospitals... so why do we need ambulances to take us to hospitals that have no room to keep us and no people to heal us?

With Ralph Klein privatizing all of the property owned by the government, I don't see why he doesn't privatize the hospitals. I bet that someone could make a lot of cash taking care of the sick and the injured.

Oh and finally, opening this week to a captive audience... it's Desert Storm II - The Return of Sadaam. That's right. Sadaam's back and this time he's really going to give his old nemesis, the United States, a real run for the oil. What's that? You don't have cable? Don't worry HBO is presenting this on pay-per-view, just call your local cable company and ask about our student discounts.

Do I CARE? Do YOU CARE?

As I was mulling over ideas for an editorial this week, I realized something. I really don't care.

Two weeks ago, Periscope Productions hastily shut down my attempt to represent the Nugget at the Stones concert. After being mad for about 2 seconds, I thought, "Why should I care, it seems nobody else does?"

Why don't I care? Well, I have had a grand total of 1 reaction in written form about the entertainment section this year. And my mailbox, which is always open for submissions, is usually totally empty.

So please submit something. Tell me that I suck. Tell me that I'm the greatest thing since sliced pita bread. Something!! Anything!!

Remember, this is your entertainment section, so use it. If your program has an event, a cabaret or a Yugoslavian Moose Training Contest, I want to know about it.

And I not, well, I'll just keep rambling, kinda like the time I went on holidays to Idaho, now that was a good time...

Stones Concert Review

By Greg Miller

Once again I will be a man of firsts. Last year, I shocked the entertainment world by reviewing a movie without actually seeing it. However, like David Copperfield, I always seem to go one up on the last time.

On the menu this week, a trip back to Voodoo Lounge and Commonwealth Stadium. Now, I'd like to clarify something, I wasn't exactly at Commonwealth Stadium. But I still heard the majority of the show - from the upper deck of neighboring Clark Stadium. Great seats I may add, but the acoustics were a little off. (I thought that "Love is strong" was "Hey meathead, your seats are wrong")

However, my brother went to the show and filled me in on the little things like the songs played, the light show and the crowd reaction.

An explosive light show kicked off the Stones performance, and they burst into one of their most recognizable songs. Unfortunately, my brother's only seventeen so he's not really sure what the song was called.

Then the Stones strummed into an hour long version of the first song played of the night (my brother swears the first hour was the same song). Suddenly the stones played a rockin' version of "Satisfaction" that put fans into a frenzy.

Then Mick and the boys played a few songs where you only know one line, but when that line comes up, you yell it really loud. This continued until the sixty foot speakers blasted out an energetic version of "Start Me Up", a song anybody can sing to, including my brother, who things the Stones stole the song "Satisfaction" from Justine Bateman.

Then, my brother was getting cold, so he just wanted to go home. The only heat he was getting during the encore, "Jumpin' Jack Flash," was from the zipperhead smoking pot beside him.

All in all, my brother came away rather impressed with the show, especially the feeling of unity with all rock fans in Edmonton. Except for, of course, the morons on the LRT during the way home, who were drunk and falling into him. Oh well, at least he can say he was there....

poetry

I'm not just a guy
Who'll go to a bar and get drunk
I'm the kind of guy who sweats
And untucks his shirt when I'm drunk.

My ant farm in my basement is good
However, my cousins don't seem to appreciate
The fact that they have no mom's anymore.

Leave no stone unturned
A man once said
So it's really too bad
That it's embedded in his head.

I'm no poet, can't you see
I'm just a guy
Trying to make you laugh
At my poems.

Here comes the Rain

Chapter 3

By Greg Miller

It was raining harder. And she was driving faster.

Conversation was kept to a minimum, just the basics.

I didn't say much, thinking that she was about to stop and drop me on the side of the road at any time. She just kept driving south, which was fine with me.

I knew her name was Beth and her car was '57 Chevy, but that was about it. She looked like an interesting girl, but I had to know more. I wanted to know more.

"So, where are you from?"

"It doesn't matter, I just know that I'm not going back there," she replied evenly.

"Yeah well, me too. All I need is to start over, find new friends, and new job, just new everything, you know what I mean?"

"Sure."

I felt kind of stupid, but I just had a feeling about her. There had to be so much more than a girl running away, something tragic.

"You know," I say hesitantly, "If you don't start talking, I'll have to tell you a joke. And I'm warning you, my jokes really suck."

She laughed, sort of. Little did she know that my spiel about my jokes sucking was actually the joke.

She looked at me and said, "Well???"

Oh, oh I thought I'd better think quick. Beth wanted a joke and I had to deliver.

"Okay, her it is, Why did the chicken cross the road?"

"Why?"

"Because his little chicken feet worked."

Okay, I admit it, not the slickest of answers but she looked at me weirdly and laughed. Mission accomplished.

It was getting late and I could tell she was getting tired, and it was still pouring. It was past five in the morning and there was no sign of a sunrise. Just grey.

She pulled over and suggested we get some sleep. Fine with me.

"So, uhh, do you want me to hop in the back seat so you can stretch a little?" I ask.

"Go for it, Ian."

I fumbled over into the back seat and heard her turn off the ignition, it was deathly silent and dark. Just the rhythmic rain drops pounding, soothing my wandering thoughts. We were both quiet for a few minutes.

"This is kinda weird hey?"

Beth said, "You know, just you and I, driving."

Wow, I thought. It sounded like she was planning on keeping me along for the ride.

"Quite weird, actually. I don't know, I just kind of go with the flow."

"I noticed. So what's your story Ian? What are you running from?"

"Nothing actually, that's the problem. Just....Nothing"

"I understand."

Moments later I heard her gently breathing, she was asleep.

*****

I probably woke up around ten o'clock, when a rather large truck went screaming past the car.

I shook my head, trying to shake the cobwebs and looked outside.

"Still raining, good. It kinda adds to the mood." I think out loud.

"Agreed." Beth offered from the front seat. I couldn't see her but it sounded like she'd been up for awhile.

"You know, I love driving in the rain. It makes me feel...I don't know, it just makes me feel...you know."

"Yeah, I do actually" I answer, and the funny thing is that I was telling the truth.

I saw her sit up and take her post behind the wheel. I took this as a cue to jump back into the front seat. I was hungry and I let it be known.

"Okay, next town we'll grab some breakfast."

A half an hour later we were seated in one of those restaurants adjacent to the gas station. We ordered our food and sat staring at a rapidly increasing puddle of water in the parking lot.

"So, uhh, where are we going and why?" I ask.

"I don't know and I don't want to talk about it," she answered

"Why don't you just tell me what's wrong. I told you why I'm running."

"Because you'll laugh at me," she defended.

"No I won't, I promise"

"Promise?"

"Yes I promise, now just tell me."

"Okay," she finally said, "well, you know that guy who stole all the money from the LRT machines? Yeah, well he's my Dad, and I'm embarrassed and I never want to see him again."

I stifle a laugh and say, "Well, whatever the reason, let's just keep going, who knows what we'll find."

by a long haired hippy freak

Aries (March 21-April 19):

You paid twenty bucks for that haircut???

Taurus (April 20-May 20):

I don't want to alarm you, but I would go see the doctor if I were you.

Gemini (May 21-June 20):

Your past is hidden to me. I guess that juvenile police record really does disappear once you turn 21.

Cancer (June 21-July 22):

Stay away from any strangers offering you badgers.

Leo (July 23-August 22):

You feel compelled to come and give me money. Go with that feeling.

Virgo (August 23-September 22):

Ya we really believe that you are a virgin.

Libra (September 23-October 22):

I see a future in the World Wrestling Federation heading your way. Run. Run far and run fast.

Scorpio (October 23-November 21):

The person who pinched your butt is sitting right beside you.

Sagittarius (November 22-December 21):

For a new fad drink try milk and ice-cubes.

Capricorn (December 22-January 19):

Stop pretending that you are Thor. God of Thunder. No-one believes you.

Aquarius (January 20-February 18):

Try to get into the new course here at NAIT. Mime Acting Technology.

Pisces (February 19-March 20):

With the stars in the proper alignment...hey wait a minute...Pisces? You don't get one remember. I told you that you sucked and I meant it.

jana KOLOT
sports editor

To Watch Hockey or Not to Watch Hockey... that will soon be the question!

Okay, I've waited long enough. I am finally going to voice my opinion on the current situation of professional sports. I think that it is part of my duty as sports editor to at least comment on it (I think it was in my job description). I am not an expert, not even close. I just had to say something.

Are you finding it harder to procrastinate. I sure am. The easiest way to procrastinate is to sit in front of the T.V. and watch the pennant race. Do you think the Expos were going to win? Or would they lose out and give the Jays a chance to threepeat?! We will never know will we?

I am not going into any details of why they went on strike, because quite frankly I don't know any of them. All I know is that they make way too much money to begin with, end of story. And the owners? I think they are pretty greedy too. End of story.

The baseball strike I can live with, the hockey strike I cannot. But, there is hope. We may see a deal go through in the next week or so (cross your fingers).

I don't think that we can truly call ourselves Canadian this year if there is no hockey. Hockey is like the changing seasons: Part of our country. (I'm probably going to get another letter because of that comment!)

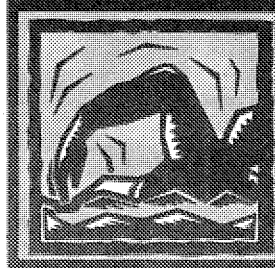

All I know is that I miss hockey. After all, this was my year to win the annual Rob Paton Hockey Pool.

And what about Don? I know I'm gonna miss Don! He's the best. I wonder what Don will do if there is no hockey?

Well I guess if there is no hockey this year, we'll always have NAIT sports. Who can beat it? It's good competition, it's free, it's close, they have a concession, there's no charge for parking, no greedy owners, no flamboyant starts, no one making more than $1000 per year, great seating, no waiting in line for autographs, great way to meet people, opportunity to rub shoulders with the athletes, and of course....they'll never go on strike!

Thanks for reading.

Ooks Go Undeclared to Win SALT Trojan Eye Opener

EDMONTON - In their first preseason action of the 1994-95, the NAIT Ooks posted a record of three wins and no losses to win the SALT Trojan Eye Opener Hockey Tournament held in Calgary from October 7th through October 9th. The Ooks last won the tournament in 1989.

On Friday, October 7th, the Ooks received a two goal performance from Stacey Rayan as the Ooks defeated the SALT Trojans 6-2. Dean Buchanan, Darryl Romano, Jamie Barnes, and Craig Samoil rounded out the NAIT scoring. Jeff Pennoyer replied with a pair for the Trojans. The Ooks held period leads of 1-0 and 4-2 en route to the victory.

On Saturday, October 8th, Craig Samoil and Dan Pilling each tallied twice as the Ooks edged the Mount Royal College Cougars 4-3 in overtime. Chris Lafreniere, Scott Longstaff, and Craig Chapman answered for the Cougars. The teams traded single markers in each regulation stanza before Samoil found the five hole at 2:57 of the first overtime.

On Sunday, October 9th, Stacey Rayan, Dan Pilling, Jamie

Barnes, and Darryl Romano netted markers in the Ooks 4-2 triumph over the Red Deer College Kings. Tom Mix and Sterling Dilezoy notched singles for Red Deer. The Ooks held period leads of 1-0 and 3-1 before the teams traded goals in the third.

The key for the Ooks in the tournament was the strong performance of the specialty teams especially the penalty killing unit which surrendered only one power play goal and scored one shorthanded goal.

The Ooks now participate in the Red Deer Elks Invitational. On Thursday, October 13th, the Ooks host the Concordia College Thunder at the NAIT Arena in a 6:30 pm match. The Ooks then play Mount Royal in Red Deer on Saturday, October 15th at 1:30 pm. The medal games are slated for 2:00 pm and 5:30 pm in Red Deer on Sunday, October 16th.

WALKABOUT Madness... Huge Success

Nait's Intramural event, Walkabout Madness had its' best turnout ever! On the main campus alone there were 207 participants. Excellent! Satellite campuses were involved as well: Westerra, 16 participants and Patricia, 24 participants.

Total amount collected was 210.00, for the United Way. In addition, two staff groups, The tooth trotters (3rd place) and All For One have indicated that they will donate their winnings back to the United Way, which will take donations in excess of $300.00 YAY!

A special thanks to Continuing Education for their sponsorship of the team challenge. This year we had our largest ever team participation.

Grapevines

To the attractive looking girl I noticed coming out of E225 from a Physics class at 2:15. I saw you through the window waiting outside to get in, and earlier in the hallway walking with your male friend. I am too shy to come up and say "hi" to you so that's why I'm going through with this. So "Hi my name is..." Yeah right. I would really like to meet you, so if your reading, please REPLY via the Grapevine.
Signed, Lonely and Shy
P.S. You were wearing a turquoise shirt, and those tight IKEDA's, God you're hot!

To the 5 Business Babes,
We haven't been hiding, we've been waiting for you to crawl out of the Tower. If you wanna have some fun, take a ride to where the Big Rigs play and find out why they call us "Heavy Duty".
Signed, 5 Crazy Guys in 1st year IHET

TO AGDEG,
Obviously you "little girls" have nothing better to do than pass judgment on someone you don't know. So, I'd thought I'd return the favor. How's this - 5 mama's girls, probably with the maturity level of a chimp, and the fashion sense of "I'll wear whatever is cool this week." Next time, have some tact. As for the attitude, I'd lose it if I could find it.
Signed Grant in Con 2B.
P.S. Try growing up, it might get you somewhere in life instead of the back seat of a car.

Happy Anniversary to the wife I met under slightly similar circumstances in Guelph. After 17 years the honeymoon is still going strong.
G.

To Shawn (LAB 14, Bus.)
I want you
I need you
I long for you
You will be mine.
M.E.

Grapevines

To Bizness,
All my life I wanted to be an engineer, now I am one. Don't make fun of my ~~prof~~ ~~profession~~ job!
Signed, the Sivil Engineers at Plaza II

To: The Business Babes,
We are not hiding. We tend to stay close to our den (Plaza II) during the day in anticipation of the night-time hunt. We are a pack of ten and you're more than welcome at our den.
The Pack From Architecture

To the 5 Business babes,
If you're looking for 10 crazy guys we'll meet you at Lauderdale's Thursday... that is, if you're feeling lucky. We're not druggies, just alkie.
Signed, A bunch of sexy single guys.

To the individual that wrote on behalf of my "friends in IET2",
Thank you for the thoughtful note in last week's edition of The Nugget. You're right, a 4 year degree in Electrical Engineering doesn't give me a significant advantage at NAIT. However, when it's "time to face the real world" I'll be certain to include the completed degree on my resume.
Darren
P.S. I look forward to your reply.

J.M.
Don't be afraid to say hi! I got over it a long time ago.
WWNNISM
L.G.

To: Tall Blonde Goddess on Women's Volleyball Team. Saw you at team pictures Tuesday, October 4th in S108. You were second to last in individual shots and wore a burgundy top - WOW! Like to get together sometime. Are you available?
Signed, A fellow athlete and admirer

To the person who found a pager in the ladies washroom in the tower,
Could you please call 421-1551. There is a cash reward offered. If you'd rather not go for the money could you please bring it to NAIT security. As you do not have the pager number it is of no value to you, but it is of value to me.

Grapevines

To all 1st year business students,
Final Exam question: 1+2+3=?
To all 2nd year business students,

P.S. Review your Grade 5 notes.

To the curly-haired in Office Admin,
We are Doug's friends in Engineering. We are sorry to inform you that Doug does not possess the ability to read or write. If you wish to communicate with him you must make low squealing noises like a pig in heat. Since Doug is from Camrose he is very fond of farm animals. Any further responses can be forwarded to the Grapevine and we will read them to him.
Doug's loyal friends

The 2 of you were being watched walking towards the LRC at about 12:55pm, Thursday, Sept. 29. One of you was blonde and one of you was dark-haired. We are 2 dark-haired girls who think you're BABES!
Signed, YOU KNOW WHO WE ARE!

To Mark (LAB 18 Bus.)
I love the way you walk
I love the way you smile
Look for me in class
Walk through my mind every mile.

Crime Report

Scene of the Crime is a monthly column designed to provide ongoing Campus Crime Statistics to you in an endeavor to inform and prevent the various perpetrations that occur on campus. Since crime against property is an ongoing problem at NAIT, we must all take an active roll in putting a stop to crime in our community.

During the month of September, thieves broke into two vehicles on campus - one car in the Parkade and one in Lot L. One vehicle had its door pried open and approximately $3000 worth of electronic equipment stolen, while the other vehicle had the parking pass stolen. In addition, vandals broke the mirror off of a motorcycle by the Activities Centre.

A variety of thefts occurred around campus, including the theft of a video recorder, a jacket, back pack, and several text books. The majority of these incidents could have been prevented had students not left property unattended. Leaving property even for a few seconds provides an opportunity for a thief.

Remember, if you see someone in the act of committing a crime, contact NAIT Security at 471-7477 immediately. Don't become a victim of opportunity....help us prevent crime.
