No Power Hour?

Tyler Harke

It's getting closer to that time of year folks. Halloween's over and now the stores will begin inundating us with the Yule tide spirit. Before you know it there will be fake Santas in every mall and black ice covering every major road in Edmonton. Ah yes, there's nothing like the hollidays. Christmas carols, egg nog, and my family's annual quest to out perform Clark Griswald's house in National Lampoon's Christmas. The only problem is, this year we may not have the power to turn our house into a radio-active glow. In fact, we might not have enough power for the lights inside - let alone outside.

15,000 homes in Calgary went through a half hour black-out last Sunday simply because there was not enough power. On that same

Sunday, six major power generator units were shut down due to equipment failure. There's talk of rotating half-hour power outages throughout the province for the peak month of December. I'm sure we're all aware that half an hour without electricity makes for a really crappy Christmas party (all body warmth aside).

Although none of the power companies will admit it, rumour has it that several of them are shopping around for some big boy generators in case their own can't meet the demand.

A healthy Alberta economy has pushed our power hunger up about five percent already from last year. An El-Nino free winter with normal minus twenty - thirty temperatures will increase it another four to five percent. That combined with a seasonal increase for the month of December puts us well over the amount of electricity we can actually pump out even with reserve assistance from B.C. and Saskatchewan.

The weird thing is that spokespeople from many Albertan power companies keep telling us we have nothing to worry about. Although none of the power companies will admit it, rumour has it that several of them are shopping around for some big boy generators in case their own can't meet the demand. Nick Kwasnycia from Waterous Detroit Diesel-Allison has received calls for generators capable of producing anywhere from 160 Killowatts (enough to run an elevator in the Business Tower) to 4 megawatts (enough to light up a small town). If that ain't the power companies shopping around - I don't know who is.

The moral of the story is we might just have to get to know our loved ones a little better this winter. It won't be like the ice storms that crippled Quebec last year, but it might make for a few more candle lit dinners than usual. So make sure you've got deodorant available, as well as any other supplies for conserving body heat. (Tee hee.) Maybe we should all invest in some Trojan shares or something. Just a thought.

Killer Milk Carton Attacks City Resident

Tyler Harke
Man on the Beat

An Edmonton man had his hand blown off Halloween afternoon when he picked up a milk carton that contained a home made explosive device. Dirk Dejong was simply cleaning up his back yard when he picked up the milk carton a triggered an explosion that broke the kitchen window of his neighbour two houses away.

Surgeons at the U of A hospital did their best to save the rest of Dejong's left arm

Surgeons at the U of A hospital did their best to save the rest of Dejong's left arm although it was too early to tell how much could be saved. The 33 year old also suffered burns to his abdomen and torso as well as several shrapnel wounds.

According to police information officer Annette Bidniak, city police and firefighters sealed the area and allowed bomb technicians to search through the remaining debris. The bomb techs are attempting to re-create the bomb from any pieces they find. The presence of an explosive in your back yard is a bad thing at any time. However, Saturday was probably the worst simply because the chances of a small child could have been severely hurt or even killed were much greater than usual.

Police are investigating the possibility that the explosive was targeted directly at Dejong. Certain neighbours who came late onto the scene seem to think it might have been an intentional attack although nothing can be proved at this time. If it is only a prank by someone with an explosives fetish and too much free time, I'm sure the Dejong family isn't laughing at the present time. Can't say that I blame them either.

Lost In Space?

Tyler Harke

Last week everyone and their dog watched John Glenn and his crew of highly trained astronauts blast off into the wild blue yonder. There's no denying that sending a seventy-seven year old man into space is amazing. I'll be surprised if I can get from my lazy boy to the can when I'm that old, let alone from ground level to several miles above the Earth.

Unfortunately, it begs the question of how important zero gravity is on wrinkles and liver spots. For the amount of money spent on fuel just to get the space shuttle off the ground, the American government could feed three or four families for about two years.

is costing the American people millions upon millions of dollars every day that Johnny and his flying tin can orbits the planet. It's a simple case of priorities.

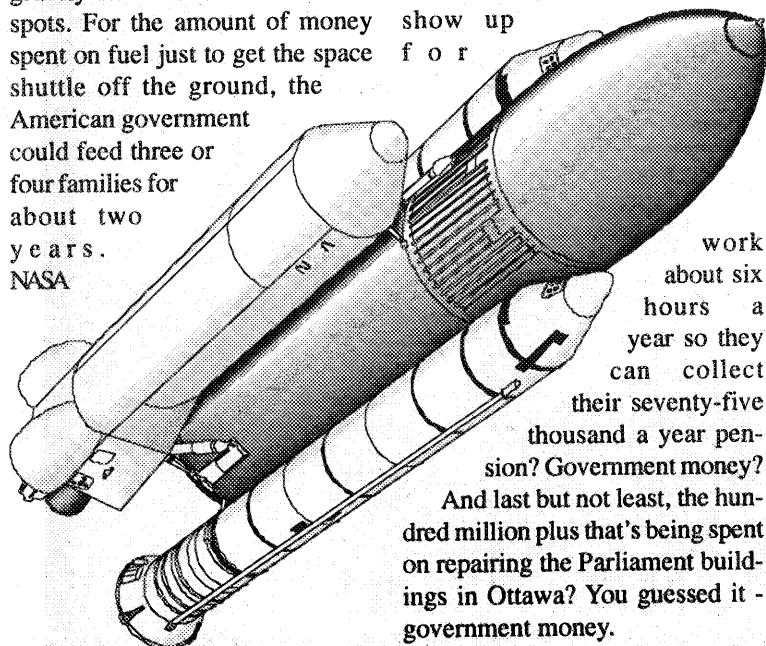

I bet you're thinking, what does this have to do with us? We're not Americans (as we all breathe a collective sigh of relief). Well, do you think Canada is innocent of bureaucratic waste? Hell no! Those roads that get torn up summer after summer, government money. The private jets for our beloved Senators who show up for

If democratic government is supposed to be run by the people, for the people, then why are there so many people below the poverty line when we cough up such a nice chunk of our hard earned pay checks to Uncle Sam? Or in our case uncle Jean.

I don't think programs like NASA should be scrapped all together. I put some faith in the public relations guys who say that it's in our future interest to have vast amounts of useless information about the gases on Venus. I do, however, think that our governments should be paying more attention to their own back yards right here on planet Earth and less time with their heads in the clouds or up their interns skirts (both of which have been known to happen quite often).

So there you have it. Is John Glenn's constipation any better in space? Who cares. Give the old guy some Metamucil and save yourself a few million. In the meantime, quit screwing around with downtown roads and give your average schmuck a break the next time he looks at his or her pay stub.

Halloween News in a Nutshell

Jenny "Psychobitch" Thornbird

• The Bunny Years

A two-hour TV documentary on former Playboy bunnies is currently being filmed. "Viewers will find their assumptions challenged and their stereotypes shattered," promises the senior programming vice-president of CTV. She says a lot of the former bunnies have hung up their satin ears and fuzzy tails to become lawyers, entrepreneurs, and authors. The special is scheduled to air next spring.

• Lightning kills entire soccer team

Lightning killed an entire soccer team in the village of Bena Tshadi in the province of Eastern Kasai. Besides wiping out the entire Congo soccer team, it also ended up injuring about 30 people on the sidelines. The score of the game at the time was tied 1-1. Investigators are blaming the lightning on witchcraft because all of the players on the opposing team were not harmed. This is not the first occurrence like this, either. Just last weekend, six soccer players in South Africa were hurt when lightning struck the field.

• Arachnophobia mania hits a B.C. town

People living in Prince George, B.C. have had spiders coming out of their ears — literally. Thousands of spiders, ranging in size from a ladybug to the size of a loonie, have enveloped trees and vehicles in webs. One resident in Prince George left her car window open a crack by mistake overnight, only to find her entire vehicle filled with spiders the next morning. Entomologists at the University of Northern B.C. are blaming the overrun of spiders on the weather, claiming that having a warm spring, a dry summer, and a mild fall so far gives the spiders a chance to reproduce at an unusual rate. They are confident that when the cold spell of winter hits though, that they'll all die and the problem will be no more.

• Lovestruck emu fails to get her man

A 6-foot-tall, 150-pound emu was treated for a broken heart and then released onto a farm populated by other emus last week. The giant bird had fallen in love with an Alabama man and stalked him for days until the Animal Rescue Foundation was able to capture it. It all started when the bird showed up at the Alabama man's home last month, drinking from a bird bath in the yard and eating wild berries. The man then started leaving dog food for the bird to eat, which only turned out to be a big mistake on his part. The emu started making deep noises in its throat, which signifies as its mating call. The bird started to chase the man's cats around and following him whenever he left his home. "I've never seen an emu hold hostages before," said a representative of the Animal Rescue Foundation, "I've never seen one stalk a human with procreation in mind, but the man had been feeding her and she had his heart set on him." Hopefully with the broken-hearted emu now being on a farm with male emus around, she'll find someone of her own species to mate with.

• The vampire disease?

Just after the Halloween weekend, a chemistry professor in California has decided to speak out against the origin of vampires. He claims that a disfiguring blood disease may be behind the myth of them. The disease, known as porphyria, was known to cause its victims to stay out of the sunlight and drink the blood from raw meat to ease its affects. The California professor says that before there was a proper name for the disease, that people centuries ago probably mistook the illness as a sign that those who had it were evil.

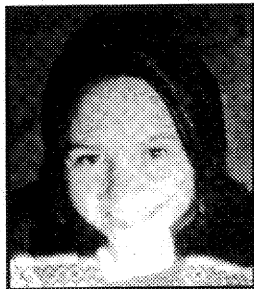

• Bullwinkle claims another victim

An Alberta man and a moose died this past weekend when the pickup the man was driving in struck a moose. The actual driver of the truck was not killed, but his passenger was. The cause of death has been attributed to hitting the moose and the passenger crashing through windshield, as he was not wearing a seatbelt at the time of impact.

• Sex and Canadians

Part One of the Toronto Sun's national survey on relationships has just been released. Here are the winning percentages in some of the categories: 36% of people said that once or twice a week over a four week basis, that they're having sex with a partner; 32% of people said that they only think about sex once or twice a week; 64% of people say that it is very difficult to find a good marriage partner; and 46% of people say that they give diddly squat on details about their sexual life to their friends. Stay tuned to The Nugget for Part Two results, hopefully to be released before the next issue.

Alberta Mom Involved in Gruesome Murder in Utah

Jenessa Kirkwood

Last Wednesday, a mother from Alberta killed her three year old girl, Rebecca Bluff, by beating her to death. She is now charged with murder.

Based on investigators' statements, Ferosa Bluff, formerly from Mountain View, Alberta, murdered her daughter by tying her up and beating her to death. She will be charged with aggravated murder, said Captain Larry Marx. Also to be charged with murder are Andrew Fedorowicz and his wife, Suzanne Fedorowicz. They lived in the same apartment complex as Bluff and were also from the same part of Alberta. From Marx's statement, it was said that they had left Alberta around eight years ago. All three were arrested and booked into Salt Lake County Jail last Thursday for investigation of child abuse/homicide.

Further medical evidence has convinced authorities that aggravated murder was the cause of death. The murder charges for all three may possibly be the death penalty. An autopsy found evidence that the victim was facing down, legs separated and naked when she was beaten. Deputies found a whip, ropes, a leather strap, child pornography, and a nylon cord in the apartment.

The injuries were applied to the girl's back, legs, buttocks, genitals, neck and face. Also uncovered at the search were pictures of sexual acts involving bondage, six videotapes that involved sexual orientated acts along with other magazines that contained pornographic material.

Investigators interviewed did not believe that there was evidence that child pornography or sexual abuse played a role in the toddler's death.

In the beginning, police were told that the three year old girl had fallen down a flight of 14 stairs the week before this happened and was placed in a tub of cold water the following afternoon because she didn't look right. Paramedics found the child near death. Rebecca died about an hour later. A doctor at the hospital said that she died from trauma caused by a blunt object. Rebecca also has a two year old sister, Sarah. She has been placed in protective custody.

NAIT Campus Crime Stoppers

Casey McGillivray

The NAIT Campus Crime Stoppers will be holding its first annual organizational meeting on November 12th at 4:15pm in conference room (O120) to recruit volunteer students to actively participate in crime prevention and awareness by introducing them to the operations of the NAIT Campus Crime Stoppers Program.

NAIT Campus Crime stoppers is a student run organization which has as its mission making our campus safe and secure. It attempts to do so through the combined efforts of all NAIT students with the help of the student board. All students are encouraged to make a combined effort to take pride in NAIT and instill a sense of ownership of the campus community.

In its first organizational meeting, this board will attempt to explain how the program works and how it is structured with the help of an Edmonton Police Services (EPS) Campus Crime Stoppers Coordinator.

The student volunteers will then be orientated as to how they can get involved in the activities of crime stoppers. Those activities would include: Advertising, Fundraising, and attending meetings.

What would volunteers be involved in?

Volunteers would be members of the Campus Crime Stoppers Board of Directors. The role of this board and its volunteers is to:

- promote the program through advertising ideas
- publicize incidents of crime occurring on or in relation to the campus
- organize fund raising events
- authorize cash rewards to callers.

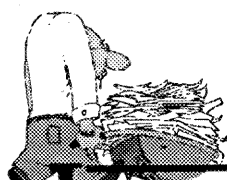

Who can become a member of the Campus Crime Stoppers Board?

Any student or staff member of NAIT who expresses an interest in the committee may become a member. So, if you are interested in participating or if you are interested in the program, we encourage you to stop by the NAITSA offices (E131) and sign up as a volunteer. If you have any other questions regarding this program, please show up at the November 12th organizational meeting.

This happy fellow Frank just drew the winning ticket to the pre-teck plunge. The winner is Lorrain Muskwa.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor,

This is in response to a letter you published last week from a "Shane Holladay" regarding a couple of articles I wrote for your paper.

After reading his letter a couple of times, I first debated letting it slide because people, after all, are entitled to their own opinions—even if they're totally dead wrong. Besides that, though, the only other reason I am even writing a rebuttal to the letter is because the person who wrote it, Shane Holladay, is not even a NAIT student. In fact, he knows me not, and I know him not. What he bases his opinions on in his letter, in fact, are "facts" he hears from his sister when she comes home from school everyday.

...I believe the only reason Mr. Holladay decided to write a letter to your paper is because of how incredibly upset and foolishly delirious his sister acted at school the day my September 24 article came out.

You see, his sister is a fellow classmate of mine, and I believe the only reason Mr. Holladay decided to write a letter to your paper is because of how incredibly upset and foolishly delirious his sister acted at school the day my September 24 article came out. While I attempted to explain this article a little better in the paper after that, in an effort to calm down people like Mr. Holladay's sister, yet again, something I generally said must have greatly upset her.

What really bothers me about some of the attitudes that Mr. Holladay feels I should address though, is that he claims that some of the females in my class worry about class issues, and he feels that I am attacking that and saying that it is immature of them. It's actually not immature at all, but what is immature about that is, is that I've watched, and heard, and seen some of my fellow classmates put down and discourage the 1st year students in our program. I have even had a couple of 1st year students approach me and tell me that people in my class have taunted them and harassed them, and generally all-round discouraged them from giving their all — and really, doesn't it only take one bad apple in our bunch to ruin things for everyone?

Perhaps if Mr. Holladay spent a day with my classmates, or even myself, he would see why I feel the way I do, or why I choose to be what he sees as "anti-social" with some of my classmates. In fact, yes, that would actually be a good thing. Then he would see that the reason I do not waste my time socializing both in and outside of the classroom when I am at school, is because I am utilizing my time to better myself and work on things that will only make me the better candidate for the jobs that are out there in my profession — in fact, perhaps by me being "anti-social" and putting that time to good use, will give me the edge on people such as his sister, when we're out competing for the same job.

Personally, while diversity can be a good thing in some cultures, in the classroom — and especially the program I am in, diversity can only end up being your enemy.

Sincerely,
Jenny Thornbird

-Well, if I HAD ANY SPACE LEFT ON THIS PAGE I WOULD RESPOND. Thank you, Jenny, for taking the time to respond to some of your fan mail. Please keep your letters short and to the point. Feel free to drop them off in any one of our submission boxes. If you have any problems, call or email them to us. Did I mention to keep them short? Oh, and by the way, let's stop beating this horse. IT'S DEAD ALREADY!

Dear Editor,

This year's Nugget is something we students can be proud to take into the bathroom. A few weeks ago, someone wrote that they couldn't understand why students headed straight for the Grapevines and didn't bother to read the articles in the paper. Simply, the Nugget has printed nothing but fluff articles that the only person who cares is the author.

A Campus student newspaper should be about human-interest stories and news and events happening around the school. Why then is The Nugget printing crap fluff articles such as the three part "Body Piercing in the Workplace" article. I would love for someone to tell me what part one and part two actually had to do with the headline. And why would the editor and author of the article think that the student body would care to read about someone's life story and when and how she got her eyebrow pierced. And why in hell did a fluff article like deserve nearly a full page for each part?

[I pulled out three paragraphs here of whining and bitching by someone who can barely form sentences. They cited a couple of previous articles that they personally didn't care for. Oh, what's this? A tear for you, I guess. I'm really sad.]

So now lets evaluate Grapevines. What is the purpose of the Grapevines? Simply, it for those "Hey, I saw you wearing a blue shirt on Monday and would like to meet you" snippets. Having technologies bash each other is a waste of space and a true sign of the immaturity level of the student body. I don't care that some bonehead thinks Powerline rocks and Business sucks. And I find it absolutely despicable that the editor feels he can edit long Grapevines down so he can have more room to print technology-bashing Grapevines. Just because the editor and some of the Nugget staff get their jollies reading technology-bashing

Grapevines, doesn't mean that the whole student body gives a shit.

And so, in the upcoming years when the new Nugget staff find that funding is cut to the Students' newspaper because more than half the papers are still left in the distribution boxes, we will have the staff this year to thank. That and the articles that have no relevance towards NAIT, the students and staff or the events of this Institute. So, editor in chief, if you want to improve the newspaper, then I know exactly which submissions should head for the trash can.

Robert S. Tuckley

-Well, to begin, I'd like to congratulate you on finding a good fake name to avoid standing behind your opinion. That takes guts. Wow, you sure fumed... I wonder what we did. I'll start my reply from top to bottom of your submission. You refer to the only people caring about the articles are the authors. This may be true, but as editor I RECEIVE CONTINUOUS SUPPORT AND CRITICISM FROM READERS through email and visits to my office. Why haven't you shown your face around my office to express your concern? If people are mad about an article, then don't they care? You sure care...

SENTENCES THAT START WITH THE WORD "WHY" GENERALLY END IN QUESTION MARKS. I'm sorry I'm yelling, but through your use of italics and non-capitalization of my job, you've devalued me. Students submit articles and the like, and they are included in the paper unless there's a reason. I edit Grapevines to increase the economical word usage of the paper, as well as to remove prejudiced remarks. Some Grapevines would take up the entire page, so I hope you understand. I'm sorry that you find me despicable. Perhaps we can step outside and have a war of words, Yosemite Sam.

Students pay for the paper, so once in a while they should be allowed to contribute whatever they want. NAIT does not pay for The Nugget. The staff at NAIT do not pay for The Nugget. The students do, and that's why there's usually not much about staff or the institute. THEY DON'T FOOT THE BILL! If you want institute news, subscribe to NAITLine. We do, and we pass along the big things to you. Your comments regarding the death of the paper? Come on... Show me a half-full distribution box, and I'll show you someone that can bitch more than you. We currently bring ZERO papers back when we put the new issues out. Oh, zero left must mean we're doing really shitty! What kind of math is that? I've gone to two other post-secondary institutions within the past five years and this is the one with the greatest student interest in the paper. Have you? If so, where? SAIT?

Next year, why don't you try to run The Nugget? Compete against me for the position if you don't like the job I've done. I'll submit this wonderful sample of your writing, and you can pick anything I've put in the paper for them to sample. Actually, come to my office and we'll arrange "Nugget Editor for a Day" just for you. Thanks for your concerns, we really do appreciate them. Get some of your friends to fix your letter, would you? Since you think I'm doing a shitty job, I won't edit for you... The Editor.

Transgender

What does it mean?

Transgender is a term that is used when a person feels discomfort with their birth sex. It can be manifested in many different forms. Some common examples are cross-dressing and cross-identification. Cross-dressing is wearing the clothes, often the undergarments, of the other sex. Cross-identification is when a person identifies with the other sex.

A very important distinction must be made. Sexual orientation is separate and distinct from transgenderism.

Together, transgender plus orientation create a very diverse group.

There are two main groups within the transgender community. Transvestites are typically heterosexual males who cross-dress and feel comfortable with being male. Transsexuals are typically males who feel that they should have been born women. These two groups have a lot of diversity within them and often the definitions, and feelings, cannot be clearly placed in one, or the other, group.

Transgender feelings often start at a very early age. Many can report specific situations when these feelings became apparent. According to the DSM-IV, many people experience these feelings as early as 2 years and rarely past age 12. Many children will experiment with gender in similar ways, but are not transgendered unless they experience these feelings for prolonged periods.

Current estimates of the frequency of transgender feelings are that about 1 in 30,000 individuals are seeking surgery. Numbers for the frequency of transvestisim is even harder to determine, but figures in the range of 1/10,000 has been mentioned.

How do I Address a Transgendered Individual?

One common question relates to how we should refer to that person. Politeness and respect dictate that we all should address these people as they appear at that time. For example, a transvestite who is currently presenting as female should be addressed as ma'am. When that same individual is presenting as male, sir is appropriate. Often, in this situation, the transvestite will have two distinct names, one male and one female.

Transsexuals simplify matters somewhat. A MtoF (male to female) should always be addressed in a feminine form. Even when presented male. This becomes very clear and a non-issue, if we consider the inner identification to be the accurate one. Similarly, a FtoM should be addressed as male, whatever his appearance. You may find it easier to think "transsexual woman" instead of "Male to Female transsexual"

'Outing'

Anyone who has a secret that they feel is shaming goes through a period where they want or need to share it. The process is referred to as 'outing.' Understandably, it is a very traumatic experience; the fear of reprisals is very great. Think of what you experienced when you took dad's car without permission before you got caught. Now multiply that fear a thousand fold.

So maybe you suspect that an individual is transgendered. Keep in mind these fears if you try to talk with them about their feelings. Be prepared to hear anything. And if you are the transgendered individual and starting to reach out, go slowly enough to give others time to assimilate what you are saying.

Above all, we must all remember that we are human beings. Do not make assumptions. If you have known a person for years before they reveal he/she secret, he/she are still the same person. Even closer now that they have shared their secret.

Cause and effect

While doctors are not yet sure of what 'causes' transgenderism, many believe that there is no cause. Often, it is compared to things like hair color, height and build. A direct correlation between transgenderism and any event has not been found. Therefore these feelings are not pathological. There is no pill that can cure these feelings.

Also, there is rarely a physical symptom. One can not go to their family physician and point to a location and say "it hurts." Because of the lack of physicality, it is very difficult for the medical profession to recognize the attributes of transgenderism.

Human beings are a very diverse group. Transgenderism is not to be feared. It is not contagious. It is not a perversion. Both parties need to maintain an open mind, respect the other and be compassionate.

And if you are transgendered, you are not alone. You can resolve these feelings.

For more information, or just to talk if this sounds like you or someone you know, call: The Transgender Support Line—988-3738 Tgsl@blonde.yellowhead.com

From the Editor:

Why Alberta is a Wannabe Saskatchewan

(Half the time, at least)

Mick Beale

Time is based on solar occurrences. The moon goes around Earth around once per month. The Earth goes around the sun about once per year and makes one complete revolution in roughly 24 hours. I know that, you know that, and the people who made Stonehenge knew that. So do the people from Saskatchewan, and that's why they are the only people in North America that don't deviate from the real time set out by the universe.

Each day I would wake up, stand on my 15 foot high ladder, looking out onto the horizon while measuring the true time of the sunrise.

I didn't realize how lucky I was to grow up in Saskatchewan, home of SST (Saskatchewan Standard Time). Each day I would wake up, stand on my 15 foot high ladder, looking out onto the horizon while measuring the true time of sunrise. There was little or no confusion with regards to the time. I knew it was noon. Cameron the farmer, in his field by Tisdale (the land of rape and honey), knew it was noon (I could see him wave from my home in Weyburn, 500km away). We didn't have to sit down and figure out if we had just changed our clocks to some sort of artificial time. We kept it simple, stupid.

Half the year, Alberta realizes that they want to have their clocks set to SST. Everyone changes their clocks then goes next door to their favourite senior citizen's house to set the time on their VCR as well. "See you in six months. Thanks for the bagels. They're donuts, you say? Okay, thanks for the donuts. Hey, no problem. No, I can't stay, I have to go out and change the clock in my car. My home computer needs the clock adjusted, too. Com-pew-ter. That machine I use for adding. Yeah, that's the one. I'd better be going now."

The sun dictates the time. Why should Alberta mess with that? No one went out to change the sundials to some new time. They likely didn't move the rocks at Stonehenge twice a year, either. Humans evolved based on the light-hours that the sun provides each day (we'll sleep for 9.3 hours if allowed to return to our natural bio-rhythms). I mean, we were created living our lives based on the solar cycles. Why change our clocks? Why only follow Saskatchewan's time lead half the year (we follow their lead the rest of the year with our Medicare)? Why be a wannabe, when we can keep our clocks the same time all year long, never waking to see, "oh, looks like 8:00, time for school," when it's really only seven. Our body has a clock. We see the sun, we know what time it is. Why mess with it? Do we really use that extra hour? Sorry for rambling, but I'm allowed to and besides, I still don't know what time it is. Silly Albertans. Until next week, don't forget to floss.

Men's Volleyball still has some question marks

Craig Wourms

The volleyball action for the men at the TKUC tournament was a roller coaster. With a rotating line up and competition at both ends of the scale, the NAIT men had trouble keeping any sort of pace throughout the tournament. In the round robin the men struggled with Lakeland College, defeating them narrowly, and then hammered Keyano College in their second game. The final round robin game was against a veteran TKUC team

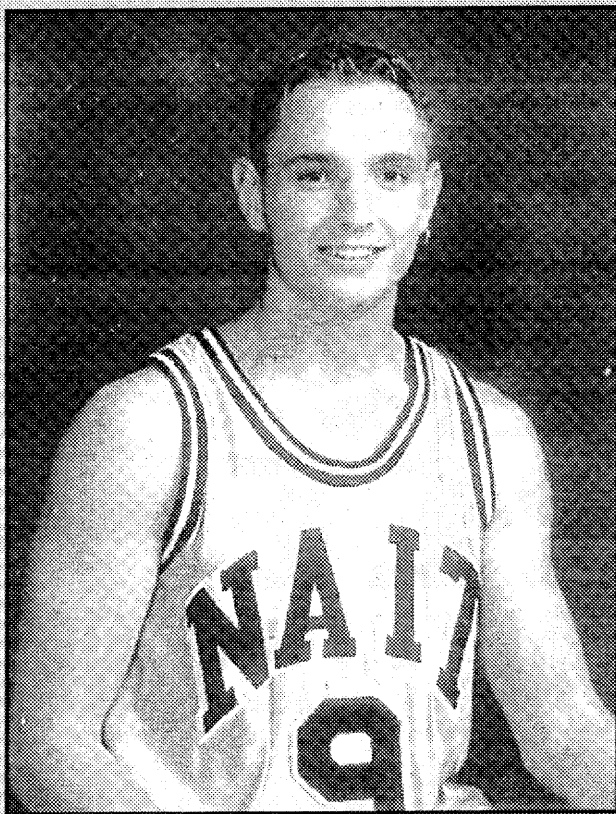

Lady Ooks start slow but finish strong

Craig Wourms

The women's volleyball team played in their first collegiate competition two weeks ago and the results were quite positive. A pre-season tournament matched the Lady Ooks up against Lakeland College, Keyano College and the host school, The King's University College. In the round robin, the women started out slow but had enough power to defeat LLC and KC quite handily, but they split their series with TKUC. In the semi finals the team started to pick up speed again, handling LLC in a very quick 2 game match to move onto the final.

In the final, the Lady Ooks were once again matched up against TKUC, making for the year's best match to date. Losing the match 2-3, the squad was a little upset with the final outcome of the tournament, but this team is progressing in the team systems and skills everyday. The four teams in this tournament were not the most difficult to compete with, but they are all teams that the Ooks must defeat to return to the playoffs for a fifth straight year.

and the squad struggled throughout the match, losing 1-2. The semi final was not a very solid match against the Keyano Huskies not preparing us for the rematch against TKUC.

The final was a very uninspired game that saw the Ooks slow out of the gate and not impressive at all. Losing the first two games, the line up was shuffled once again and the squad started to light it up. The rallies were very impressive and the offense started to shine, but the TKUC Eagles managed to stay on top and win their home tournament for the first time in four years.

Hockey OOKS starting to find the positives

Andrew "Cheap" Hore

This year's edition of the Men's Hockey Team started the 98/99 regular season on a somewhat sour note three week's ago. The first two games of the season were against the Concordia Thunder, a team who defeated us in the Mount Royal pre-season tourney. We came out completely flat for the first game of the year, receiving a embarrassing loss. Game two was the Home Opener at Nait, the boys were better mentally prepared for this game winning the tilt in front of the large crowd. The first weekend ended with a split with Concordia.

The next opponent for the OOKS was now the Augustana Vikings, a team we didn't have much trouble with through the pre-season. Both games we managed to outshoot the Vikings by a considerable amount; however, the hard work didn't pay off. A sweep by the Vikings over the weekend, leaving the OOKS with a 1-3 record early in the season.

Off to Red Deer for the third weekend of action. Another chance to play through the frustrations of the previous two weekends. Game 1 in Red Deer didn't start out the way we planned it to. After a 4 minute penalty in the first shift we found ourselves down two goals thanks to PP goal and a greasy one by the home town Kings. The fella's remained focused and positive but still managed another goal against. We fought back late in the first frame with a nice goal by Derek "Jack Daniel's" Stone. We came out flying in the second period swarming Red Deer for the majority of the frame. The game was a back and forth battle right into the third period, we fought hard, but came up short once again. OOKS 2 / red deer 4

We came home the night of the Red Deer game on a quiet bus asking many questions. How can a team that did so well in pre-season start the regular season with a 1-4 record? How can we be losing with such a good team? Everybody was a coach the whole way back to Edmonton. The next night at home we finally realized we have to go out there and just PLAY. Play for the love of the game, play for ourselves, play for the pride we have in the uniforms we wear, play HARD! Game 2 turned out to be a change for the positive in this years

The next night at home we finally realized we have to go out there and just PLAY.

OOKS. With an afternoon meet the parents and players pre-game luncheon the day of our game our team was incredibly focused on getting a win that evening. A win was just what we got. The OOKS came out flying against Red Deer with an early goal by Shawn "off the head" Hove. Shawn later chipped in a couple more goals to lead the home town OOKS to a commanding 6-2 win. We played an overall strong game, playing hard for a full 60 minutes, getting solid tending by the "Chimp" and having strong special team play throughout. The Nait OOKS Hockey Team is back on track with a rejuvenated bunch of guys looking for a sweep in Briercrest, Saskatchewan this upcoming weekend. Two wins against the clippers would take the team to 500 record of 4-4 with an upcoming weekend series against the rival Sait Trojans.

Until next time, keep your chin strap done up.

The Harleywood Dine

Kingsway Garden Mall
477-3888

Moderate prices

If she gets bored easily, this place may fix the problem for you. How can anyone be bored here? NAIT students have free pool from 11 to 4pm, and 50% off the regular price after that. She doesn't like pool? There's always NTN. Too stupid for NTN? There's a few good video games there. They've got all the answers to keeping someone busy and happy there, not to mention a great menu.

If you bring her here, be sure to wear something that you can break dance in. Well, maybe not, but it'd be pretty cool. There's people in suits having Martinis on Wednesdays, Cowboys enjoying the ribs on Thursdays, and a mixed crowd the rest of the week. You can bring her by any day, anytime, and you can be sure that they'll treat you well.

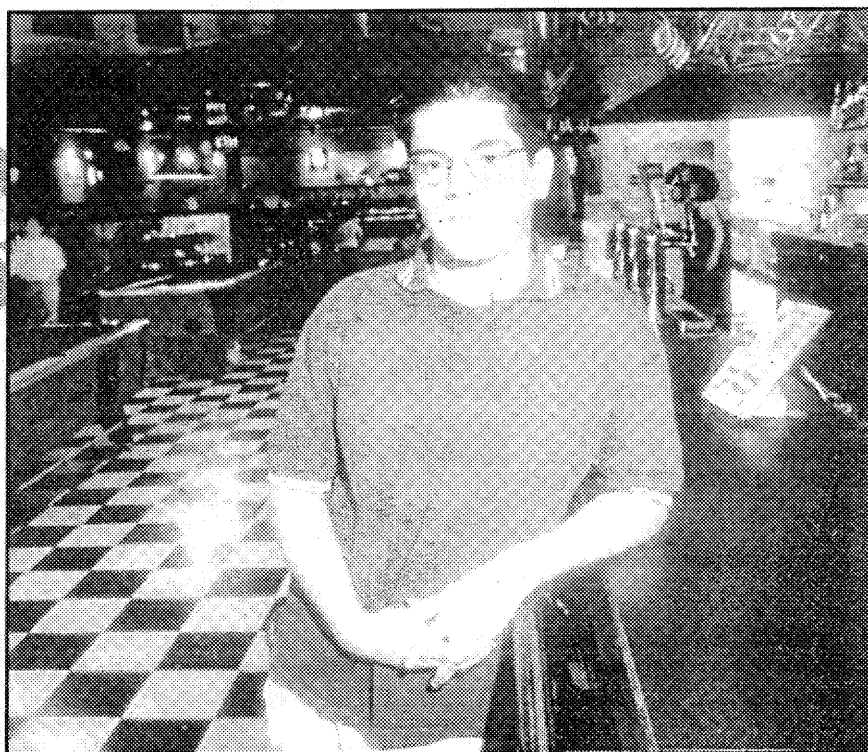

I recommend making the date for a quiet night when the mall isn't so busy. That way there will be less traffic and less people that you know (this is close to NAIT) barging in on your date with your baby. The booths have a nice 50s feel to them, which is further accented by the checkered tile floor. Whatever you do, be sure to remain calm. There are lots of cool video games enticing you to leave the table, but don't give in. You'll be fine, really. Leaving the table will only make her mad.

"My baby will have the Fettucini Alfredo with the chicken breast on top ($7.95) and I'm gonna have the char broiled bacon cheddar burger ($6.95)." There's a number of different items on the menu following the typical diner theme (six burgers, six chicken burgers, lots of appetizers, wings and fries). What stands out on Harleywood's menu, though, is the salad, pizza, pasta and other selections, all at reasonable prices that leave you some change to race her (and take out your frustrations in a safe matter) at one of the video games.

When the bill comes, don't be afraid. Hopefully while she was powdering her nose you managed to mention that you get a 15% discount for being a NAIT student to your server. Relax with her on one of the comfy couches or in your booth. There's a strange atmosphere for a unique date, that she will likely remember.

Twin Cities

Nait Student Invents Board Game

Kevin Pedersen

After many years of playing board games together, Kelly Exner's family came home one day to find him surrounded by cardboard in the spring of 1996. "We were getting bored by the games that were available. They all seemed so similar. We always joked that we should invent one ourselves. One day, I got inspired and started working on a prototype," says Kelly Exner, President of Exner Enterprises and inventor of Twin Cities.

Kelly came up with the initial idea by amalgamating elements of other games with his imagination. Once the cardboard prototype was done, he realized that the board could be cut up into pieces. This discovery turned out to be the unique feature of Twin Cities — the game that's never the same twice. "There is a better chance of winning the Lotto 6/49 than getting the exact same board layout," he says. Another prototype was then made out of fiberboard, with the whole family pitching in to perfect the design. The game board is made up of durable, plastic, interlocking pieces that allow the board to be changed while still being a cohesive unit.

With a rough outline of rules and strategies, the Exner family played the game many times to see where improvements could be made. Test groups were then used to fine tune the rules and create a one-of-a-kind game that all ages would enjoy.

The entire process of getting the final product took two years. From the game's inception, the Exner family went from beginners to experts on manufacturing and patents — at times, guided only by the belief that their game was something unique and had the potential to be the next big thing.

In the last few months, this belief has been supported many times over — people love this game. Children and adults alike are addicted to it. Everyone who has played Twin Cities raves about the combination of luck and strategy, and the fact that the game board is new each time they play it and how much rivalry and laughter occurs while playing. Many have already bought Twin Cities for Christmas gifts.

People are always looking for something new and unique to play. Something where friends and family of all ages can get together and have a great time. Twin Cities is that perfect something.

-Editor's Note: Twin Cities is available at Campus Reads and Needs. I recommend that you place your cities on the pieces numbered between 7 and 12.

Graham Coxon

Caroline Records

StrangeFruit

I must say that I really enjoyed Coxon's disc... at times. Other times I found myself really detesting - I'm using the word 'detesting' here - not only the lyrics but also the musicalism and musicianship. I don't care if he is the lead guitarist for Blur. This stuff would have been P-E-R-F-E-C-T if he had only played it mellow, kept the electric out, and tried to SPEAK his lines clearly. Man, you have to strain to even distinguish his voice from the instruments!

Not to mention the "low production values" practically stamped right across the front of the c.d. He admitted in a brief propaganda interview published on his web site (which is listed above) "The instruments are all played by myself and due to my own impatience with recording processes, the songs were bashed out in 5 days." Wow. Talk about your artistic duty to perfection. The ratio of good:suck here is probably around 70:30. It was really hard for me to pin it down just because it comes of as totally schizophrenic - one minute it's soft and introspective and then BAM! Within the same song Coxon cranks out a screeching chainsaw of a gee-tar and the decibel level triples. Then he's back down to a nice instrumental piece. Then right after he finishes singing "Me You We Two" he starts into a song whose title is, and I'm not kidding "Who the Fuck?" Dichotomy... right here... dichotomy... anybody for a dichotomy... get your red hot dichotomy! Besides that, the entire disc of 11 songs is just over 30 minutes long. Not much bang for buck at work.

Capricorn (December 22-January 19)

I know you have secrets, I know you have answers; so, tell me this: What does the OOK mascot REALLY wear under the owl uniform, if anything? Resist temptation to tell anyone else. If anyone else even asks you, be sure to wrestle them to the ground and pull the back of their undies over their head.

Aquarius (January 20-February 18)

There is a box of plaid condoms in your backpack. Does this mean you're destined to do it with style? No! It's just another GAP gimmick trying to make you do it with style. Oh, also learn to do more things with your toes this week. If you do, you may find you'll soon be able to accompany yourself on the piano.

Pisces (February 19-March 20)

Oh ee oh. Ho-o Chi Minh. Follow the litter trail to the new cafeteria, and today someone will get you to sit still by telling you that you are surround by 500 poisonous and invisible snakes. It's also time to change your hair color if you believe them.

Aries (March 21-April 19)

Are you feeling confused? Directionless? Like maybe, perhaps, YOU LOST YOUR BRAIN? Well, if you've got nuffin' but stuffin', it's time to start attending those "Clueless Anonymous" meetings again. In the meantime, keep repeating to yourself, "I am NOT a lettuce.. I am NOT a lettuce" and by bedtime you'll have convinced yourself.

Taurus (April 20-May 20)

Poppies! They're red, they're preeeety, they're... oh... you want them SO badly... but you're getting sleepy... sleeeepy. A short, little man will ask you out for drinks, and you will think to yourself, "Hmm, what COULD a short, little man drink?" It will be very wise to refuse this offer.

Gemini (May 21-June 20)

Stop being such a coward about everything! Bare your teeth, growl, smack a couple of hockey players upside the head today! You are also doomed to live a very short-lived life if you do this. Oh well.. maybe just go by the Debate Club and moon somebody.

Cancer (June 21-July 22)

If someone is sticking sexual notes in your locker, invest in an alarm system or the chastity of your virgin eyes could be at stake. If for some reason you decide to meet the person sticking these notes in your locker, you'll find out that they don't look anything like the person who sits next to you in your first morning class of the day.

Leo (July 23-August 22)

Get some oil action going with the one that you love. Candlelight, a massage, and WD-40 are perfect for getting all your kinks out. After you're done re-enacting "Debbie does her mechanic" in the bathtub though, you will have an embarrassing accident with your toy nuclear sub and end up in the ER.

Virgo (August 23-September 22)

Relax. Maybe a house will fall on the car of the idiot who keeps parking too close to you. Today is also a good day to begin reading "The Dummie's Guide to Growing Tofu Indoors". Today is also a good day to shave your back — you'll need the extra hairs to insulate the tofu crop.

Libra (September 23-October 22)

Hey there, sexy thang. Wanna try on some new gear? How about these pretty red slippers? And this nice collar? Now bark. Just be sure to stay out of the basement because there are places down there that only belly button lint should go.

Scorpio (October 23-November 21)

Homesick? Missing Aunt Flo? Eating those M&M's won't help. At times like this, the only thing you can do is click your heels to a Richard Simmons video or pick up the phone. Also, plan on being late for school tomorrow. A localized anti-tachyon surge will occur in your neighbourhood and time flow will not return back to normal until 2 p.m. Saturday.

Sagittarius (November 22-December 21)

Okay, it's time to leave the Naitrium behind and forget about the soaps for a while. Find some good drugs and go tra-la-la for a while. While you're tra-la-la-ing though, if you go into a bookstore, you'll find you have an incredible urge to buy that "How to Start Your Own Worm Farm" book you always wanted. RESIST TEMPTATION! And buy a soap magazine instead. Afterall, what the hell are you doing out of the Naitrium? Don't you know Days is on??

If today is your birthday...

I'm so happy for you that I'm bursting with fruit flavor. I hope someone spansks you very hard and that you don't get childhood flashbacks from it. Oh, and be sure to return the fuzzy handcuffs to E-128B. I hear they belong to one of the Nugget staff members.

Exotic Erotic Fashion Show

October 31
10450 116 Street
(Hellenic Cultural Centre)

StrangeFruit

I know, I know. I know what you're thinking: "why don't you just go to Pinky's...?" I suppose I should have except that I had to find out for myself. Gotta see what these 'fashion' shows are all about. The answer is 'not much.' First off, I get miffed when the show starts, oh, I don't know, TWO HOURS, that's right, TWO HOURS late! I suppose that's just so they can horde all us horny folk in and make us wait, buy a few drinks, etc. (i.e. spend a little cash on top of the $15 we blew on admission). I guess that the wait was somewhat abated by two things: the Human Buffet lady (this naked chick, totally Saran wrapped, lying on a table while covered in food — side note: for $2 you get to lick whipped cream off any part of her body!) and the rest of the crowd. It was Halloween. People were dressed funny. Funny weird, not funny ha-ha. Mucho Goths, a couple guys in g-strings, some women in diaphenous fabrics... Four or five of the Goths took the dance floor for almost an hour and danced their strange dances while everyone else watched.

When the show does start, the organizers made the mistake of playing up the erotic significance of Halloween by staging a 5 minute macabre sequence with all the models solemnly bearing Jack O'Lanterns to the runway. Stupid! They had the smoke machine going for a couple minutes so the audience had trouble seeing, there were no fashions involved and they took the pumpkins back at the end of it any way!

As for the fashions, that part only lasted 50 minutes tops, but some of it was pretty interesting. Ranging from 'regular' clothes from Colour Blind all the way through leatherware, body painting, chain mail and bondage gear. To be true it was pretty interesting but it was VERY amateurish. The models were dichotomized into either free-spirits and the very inexperienced. Some of those chicks did not look comfortable walking up and down the stage without a top on. I find it difficult to keep my composure when talking about this event as a 'Fashion Show.' If it was as such, then they didn't take themselves very seriously, lacking talented models and designers (with some notable exceptions). If it wasn't a fashion show, then it was more like a melodramatic strip tease with some alternative props and featuring a few brief, very awkward and fumbly lesbian interchanges. Watching it all made me uncomfortable. To top it all off, they threw candy at our heads. Big, solid disgusting caramel candies in orange and black wrappers that

...the Human Buffet lady (this naked chick, totally Saran wrapped, lying on a table while covered in food...

NOBODY seemed interested in.

They gave away some prizes later on for Mr/Ms Erotic and other door prizes that I didn't care to stay for. They're having another show in January or February. I hope they put a little time and effort into that one. And maybe I'll go to that one too. And maybe by that time the organizers will have figured out what they want to do: give the show some dignity, some respectability (still allowing nudity) and make it a formal fashion event, or simply use the clothes as incidental props for an elaborate dramatic staging of a stripper play where there are no pretenses about why people are showing up late on a Saturday night, a Halloween night, when it's cold out, and there are better places to be and better things to do.

Julie's Web Review

We Must Remember This

Julie McKenzie

When I was young, I didn't want to go to Remembrance Day ceremonies. I didn't believe in the solution of war that was imposed on a country's people by its government. Now that I'm older (and hopefully a little wiser), I do go to a ceremony every November 11th. I feel the same as I always have about war, but now instead of ignoring Remembrance Day and enjoying the 'day off', I attend a ceremony in whichever city I find myself.

This change in attitude came about quite unexpectedly. My husband and I were on holidays, stomping around Alberta. We stopped in the town of Nanton, to visit the Nanton Lancaster Society Air Museum. The museum honours members of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Royal Air Force who engaged in bombing missions to World War II. My husband wanted to look at one of the few remaining Lancaster bombers in the world, and I wanted to stretch my legs.

As we walked about, looking at exhibits, I couldn't help but become extremely saddened by the images I saw. We walked over to the bomber on display, and marveled at it's size: it seemed so small to hold the requisite crew and bombs needed to complete a mission. As I climbed through the plane, I was overwhelmed with grief and terror. I've never been claustrophobic before, but just being in that machine made me so. Understanding, even the tiniest little bit, of the conditions that these men had to fight under made me extremely compassionate and eternally grateful to the men who fought for us. Going to the Remembrance Day ceremony once a year is a very small way to say 'Thank you' to thousands I will never know for allowing me and millions of others to live in peace.

You can visit the Nanton Lancaster Society Air Museum on the web at: www.lexicom.ab.ca/~nanton/nanton.html.

Pretty, delicate,
Gentle L.T.,
No years can erase
Mem'ry of thee.

You, my first true love,
I stabbed through t'heart,
Destroyed what we had,
Ripped all apart.

My words so cruel,
From mouth spoken.
Now, this short poem —
A mere token,

To try and soothe pain,
Near thirty year,
T'offer my sorrow —
T'my first true dear.

I'm sorry for hurt,
So long ago,
Thoughtless and mindless,
My anger did show.

The hurt may seem gone,
Much time has passed,
But deep, deep inside,
Always to last.

Forgive me, L.T.,
For wrongs I've done,
For hurting your heart,
— my special one!

Don't mind if I do.

David Veilleux

Did I ever have a busy weekend. Not only did I attend the Watchmen/ Big Wreck concert earlier in the evening, but I also found time to make it out to the NAITSA Hanger Banger. This little soiree was held at the Edmonton Aviation Museum hangar, a place I'm growing quite fond of. The Travoltas, a very capable cover band, headlined the party. Good times and crazy costumes were in evidence, making this a memorable experience for many. My personal pick for best costume, also best costume winner of a Nintendo 64, goes to our beloved editor-in-chief Mick, with an excellent dead-on rendition of KFC Poster Senior, Colonel Sanders. (I'm not even sucking up; it was actually that good.) Many other cool costumes were to be found, such as Mike K.'s 70's tennis costume and Rollergirl (Mmmm). The event was well run and security was gracious and forgiving, which is always a good sign. Due to my extreme state of inebriation, details of this event a very sketchy. Sorry, I'll try to drink a little bit less next time. I also apologize to the fifty or so girls I hit on. Thanks to those that accepted. Do try to make it out to the next NAITSA sponsored event, as they are a great way for students from every tech to socialize and get to know one-another. Oh yes, I should mention the crappy after-party I went to. Those that went with me know what I'm talking about. Peace Out.

Who Watches the Watchmen?

David Veilleux

I do. That meant that I was in for a treat this past weekend, as the Watchmen and Big Wreck performed at the Shaw Conference Centre on Friday October 30th. Along with an excellent opening act, the two bands gave one heck of a performance. The opening band, Mayfield 4, put on a solid set, putting much of the crowd on their feet. The show really began to rock with the appearance of Big Wreck. This is a band well on their way to the top, with more than a few surefire hits on their first big album. They gave a high-energy performance, and the pit really seethed to hits such as "Blown Wide Open". Lead singer Ian Thornley showed why this band is up-and-coming, as his vocal talents are strictly amazing. He also gave much respect and admiration to The Watchmen. The Watchmen opened strong with the hit "Stereo" and just never stopped. I may be a bit biased from now on as I am admittedly a very big fan. Always a strong influence in any line-up, as proven at this year's Edgefest, The Watchmen kept everyone on their feet. Too bad my favorite song "Lusitana" was once again omitted from their set. Stirring ballads and hard rocking favorites made for many new fans in the audience and strengthened the adoration of existing ones.

Some quotes from fellow NAIT students on the night and the bands include:

"The Watchmen are one of the best bands I've ever seen, yet the organization of the concert itself was lacking. I wasn't disappointed with the bands, but rather with whoever was in charge of venue organization." - Chantelle S.

"Not initially being a Watchmen fan, and knowing only a few of their songs, I can truly say they now have a new fan..." - Anonymous

"Whoever made this an all ages gig is on crack... the 18+ fence really sucked. Big Wreck is a truly incredible band." - Jayson R.

As you can see, fans really enjoyed the bands. I can't wait until they come back once again. If you'd like to learn more about The Watchmen, visit their web-site at 'www.the-watchmen.com'. Don't miss out next time...

What happened Chris, did your wannabe Vanilla Ice Music Career fail miserably like we all thought it would? Talking over a keyboard demo won't ever cut it. Laughing at your attempt

To the girls with taste,
Some people enjoy intelligent conversation. You stupid chicks, do you share one brain or pass it around? I am surprised that you can form sentences let alone coherent thought. I don't mind stooping to your level to write this. You would be lucky to know someone like Casey.

Pop a f*cking midol! Can't you guys take a joke? Who wanted your opinions anyway? Besides, you should be glad that there is a BUS program @ NAIT. All of us business intellectuals could have easily taken instrumentation, leaving you losers working @ McDick's/ If all you instruments are so sure you'll find great jobs after NAIT, why do I know one instrumentation boy looking for a back-up career in the porn industry (right D.B.)?

To all you idiots still worrying about classmate "D",
Give it up already! Haven't you got anything else to complain about? All classmate "D" wants is attention — which you guys are giving him. Besides, we figured out who he is and he really isn't worth all the fuss. If you want to know who he is, he's in group AB and walks around with a D on his hat. We've decided that the D stands for Dunc. (We have overheard some of his marks and they are actually quite pathetic). Signed, Tired of "D" and his friends, hope they're gone soon

To CRUSH and the rest of the f*cking jar-head Instrumentation hump backs, Nobody from Business bothers to reply because you are all obviously simple-minded, Ford versus Chevy arguing, masturbating-while-watching-Teletubbies, egotistical half-wits. Maybe in a couple years I'll think about these Grapevines as I sit behind my desk with my mediocre paycheque and wonder if your big paycheque and big ego managed to pull in some big workers comp ever since your legs got cut off in that industrial accident and your slut wife left you. Who knows? Maybe in your next life you'll use your brain for work and your body for pleasure instead of using your body for work and your brain for nothing.
Love always, MOM

Two assholes in the tower (guy one: backwards Adidas cap and bag. guy two: gold chains and leather jacket) You sit in the middle of the room. Make fun of every girl that you see. Stair at there ass and boobs! Ya you are soooo cool! People can hear you. Grow up.

-Alright, stop this one already. We've gotten the point. Anyone else submitting an intentionally misspelled Grapevine won't have it published. I'm putting my foot down. Cool it with the inter-tech bashing, and try to spell things right. You're means "you are" and your means "belongs to you." There means "a place" and their means "belonging to them." I hate to have you looking bad in the old Grapevines, but I'm not going to edit them unless it is for brevity or to remove the rampant racism that has surfaced. If you are smart like truck, that's how I'll leave your Grapevine. Your humble Editor, Mick Beale.
