THE BATTLE OF ALBERTA College Style

Kook reinforcements

Kook McCorry A Kook on the ice

From their best to their worst, that tells the tale of Friday night's game against the SAIT Trojans. The Ooks were tied in and ready for an eight-second ride, one problem, they forgot to hold on for the full eight seconds. The best hockey they have played all year came in the first period, a one sided contest seemed inevitable. Coming out of the chute with conviction, the Ooks took the game to the Trojans who seemed to be taken a little off guard by the early first period deficit which saw James Seney and Knees Beaulieu scoring for the good guys.

The game however was won in the second period. SAIT was re-energized between periods, coming out and scoring in the first minute of period two. Little emotion was shown on the ice and on the bench. Shawn Villeneuve may have woke his mates up by throwing a come-a-part of all come-a-parts half way through the second period. Villy sat for ten, but the message was sent to the troops. "WAKE UP!:" Down 3-2 headed into the third, the Ooks looked frustrated and beaten.

The brain collapse occurring in the second period costed dearly, and it damaged a possible weekend sweep of the number 1 ranked team in Canada. Aaron Millar scored in the third while SAIT tallied twice, final score SAIT 5 NAIT 3. Darryl "Chimp" Hodgson was taken off the ice late in the third and did not return.

EgyptAir Flight 990 Crash Baffles Investigators

JAMES OLSON

Since the crash of EgyptAir Flight 990, the search for the plane's flight data recorder has been the focus of the investigation. That data recorder was recovered late last Saturday night with the help of a remote-controlled robot.

But the cause of the crash remains a mystery.

The voice recordings of the pilot and co-pilot reveal only that a problem developed and got continually worse until the plane finally descended into the ocean. The recorder provided 31.5 minutes of good recording and then nothing.

"Alarms go off. Both [pilot and co-pilot] work to fix it. It [the problem] gets progressively worse. And the tape stops," a source close to the investigation said Sunday.

Flight 990 crashed off the coast of Massachusetts on October 31st, killing all 217 people on board, including 22 Canadians. (source: The Associated Press)

news from Planet NAITSA General Council Discontinues the Blair Witch Project

Johnny Cotton Tail
with help from Oz

"Sex Lady" @ NAIT Next Thursday

Sue Johanson, author of such books as Talk Sex (Penguin, 1988), Sex is Perfectly Natural, But Not Naturally Perfect (Penguin, 1993), and Sex, Sex and More Sex (Penguin 1995) is scheduled to arrive at NAIT next Thursday.

Johanson is the recipient of the Canadian Organization of Campus Activities Speaker of the Year Award for the past five years and was inducted into the COCA Hall of Fame in 1998. This comes with a big price tag, 1600 bones. She will be here between 11 o'clock and one, in the gym next Thursday, November 25th. Free condoms for all who attend the show.

Blair Witch Project Abandoned

In light of recent budget cutbacks and an ailing local economy, General Council voted to discontinue the Blair Witch Project on Tuesday.

"It's a decision we'll all have to live with. But it would've been nice to get some hard data before the end of the program," said NAITSA President Gavin Kopp.

The project was the brainchild of RTA student Jerome Bouchier and suffered from numerous hardships even in the initial stages of development. Those difficulties continued throughout the implementation of the program, finally culminating in the so-called "Day of the Bears".

In 1994, Jerome and a few other NAIT students ventured into the woods looking for a witch. A few days after entering the forest, the group was accosted by a large group of bears, reportedly teddy bears, who were having a picnic.

"I guess it [the Day of the Bears] was the straw that broke the camels back," said Bouchier of the attack. "The bears wouldn't even let us explain."

A wrap-up operation is underway to analyze the small amount of data that was recovered after the attack. The recovery operation has been tentatively named, "Teenage Catgirls in Heat".

The Naitrium Prepares for Shag

The Naitrium is getting its new shag-carpeting this weekend. This means that the Naitrium will be closed. This also means that students will not be able to have sex in the Naitrium from Friday to Sunday. The upgrade includes a multitude of microwave stands and student e-mail kiosks.

Fan Bus Follies

The booze bus is reportedly leaving from the Nest Saturday at 3 o'clock. It will take its passengers to Calgary for the Oaks vs. MRC game. There is speculation that the Oaks will "mount" the Cougars.

Along the same lines, the Fan Bus Club (FBC) is heading into action. The FBC membership costs $10 and includes a t-shirt, horn, stickers and deals on the Ook fan bus. An unconfirmed source also said that the bus runs on sex, drugs and rock 'n roll.

The always legally impaired Johnny "the Fist" is expected to be on the fan bus, accompanied by Nicole from Office Administration.

Investigators found the missing flight data recorder on Saturday.

What's Your Excuse?

A survey of 175 students and 106 instructors at a university in southern Illinois found that the most common excuse given and accepted for late assignments and missed exams is, "My grandmother died." Senior psychology students at the university made up a list of two dozen possible excuses and then queried various students and instructors. One of the instructors polled even added the comment, "In my 27 years as a teacher, I have never had a dead grandfather — only grandmothers."

The Nutty One Returns

Eddie Murphy will be returning to the big screen in August 2000 in "The Nutty Professor 2: The Klumps." Eddie Murphy's character, the boisterous Sherman Klump, will have his marriage plans to colleague Denise Gains (to be played by singer Janet Jackson) disrupted by the return of his alter ego Buddy Love.

Searching For The World's Largest Breasts

The Personal Beauty Corporation, a company that specializes in making custom bras, is on a search for the world's most endowed woman. When she is found, the company will build for her, free of charge, the "world's biggest brassiere." The Personal Beauty Corporation is hoping this marketing campaign will land them a spot in the Guinness Book of World Records. They claim the woman who fits the profile will receive a lifetime supply of bras custom-tailored to her record-setting dimensions. Women whose cups runneth over are urged to call the company's 1-800 number (1-800-221-6793) or visit their website at <http://www.biggestbra.com>. In the words of the company's president Victoria Morton, "We don't know how bountiful the world's chestiest woman will be, but our bra fitters are ready to handle whatever bounces their way!"

Is Jodie Foster A Cannibal?

Recently, Jodie Foster was misquoted as saying that she would not reprise her role as FBI agent Clarise Starling in the sequel of "Silence of the Lambs" because, in the sequel, Clarise becomes a cannibal. Just this past week, however, the actress issued a statement clarifying where she really stands on playing the role. She stated that she will only make a decision after she reads the script, of which she is still waiting to receive.

NASA Shuttles May Become Commercially Available

The space shuttle may soon be granting flights to tourists. At a business conference last week, NASA offered two shuttle flights for commercial use to the United Space Alliance. To get the flights, however, the company must first find customers to fill them. The idea of space tourism was then suggested. The option of flying tourists on the shuttle would be an about-face for NASA if the idea goes through. NASA has been turning down requests to fly tourist excursions after the death of school teacher Christa McAuliffe and her students in the Challenger explosion in 1986.

This Week's Sign The World Is Ending

Victoria Beckham, better known in the entertainment world as Posh Spice, says she wants to become an actress. She is apparently currently taking acting lessons and has had a few meetings with some of Hollywood's reported "biggest movers and shakers." Posh Spice says that she doesn't want to be looked at as leading lady material, however, and would rather play a supporting actress in a comedy. She cited that her favorite movie is currently "Notting Hill," but not for Julia Robert's character, but rather for the character played by Emma Chambers, who portrayed Robert's wacky sister.

Lest We Forget

Leon Stukelj, the oldest living Olympic champion, has passed away. He died in Slovenia only a few days before his 101st birthday. Stukelj's career started in 1924 in Paris when he won gold medals in the horizontal bar and all-around. In 1928 in Amsterdam, he went on to win another gold medal, but in the rings competition this time, as well as two bronze medals. Stukelj's final medal came in 1935 in Berlin when he won the silver medal in rings.

Mmm Mmm All Better

Daniel Davis, a 46-year-old Chicago, Illinois, man recently enjoyed a milkshake. It may not sound very newsworthy, but the milkshake he enjoyed was the first one he had had in 32 years. Until recently, Davis had been taking insulin to control his diabetes. He underwent a kidney-pancreas transplant on October 29, however, and was released from hospital last week. So far, David hasn't had any problems with organ rejection, and if all goes well, he will never have to take insulin ever again, and he will be able to enjoy all the milkshakes he wants.

It's About Time...

Archbishop John Favalora and his bishops were the first among 3,800 church workers in Florida to be fingerprinted. The policy to fingerprint all church workers who deal with children, the elderly, and disabled people, came after a recent allegation against a pastor in Broward County, Florida, of stalking and exposing himself to a young child. It was then that bishops in Florida decided something needed to be done, and thus voted the fingerprinting policy in. Archbishop Favalora issued a statement, explaining the action being taken as "necessary" in that the "church has a responsibility to not only serve people, but to protect them — particularly the children."

Scarlett O'Hara was a Bitch?

You Bet!

Jenny Thornbird

This past weekend, I had a lot of time on my hands. I was home babysitting my sick kitty, so I passed the time by watching a LOT of old movies. Well, by sheer luck, one of those old movies just happened to be "Gone With The Wind," and this was always a movie I had wanted to see. Not in my wildest dreams, however, did I ever think it would inspire me to write an article...

Scarlett O'Hara was a bitch — and what's not to admire about it? After all, what other movie heroine starts out with nothing but her wits and courage and then ends up with more money and power than she could have ever imagined?

Scarlett manages to carry herself through the American Civil War and come out on top in a society dominated entirely by men. First off, she delivers her friend's baby all by herself. She then drives herself, the newborn baby, the sickly mother of the baby, and a slave from Atlanta across the war torn countryside to her home after pooling her resources to get a horse and wagon.

Well, all is not peachy when Scarlett arrives at her childhood home as she discovers it to be in ruins. On top of that, she finds out that her mother died, her father went insane, and that the house had been used as a Yankee headquarters! Despite this unhappy homecoming though, Scarlett did not give up or wait for a man to come and rescue her. Instead, she swore that she would take care of her family come hell or high water — and she did just that, including picking and planting cotton with her own bare hands (which, in those days, was a VERY prickly and painful task).

As if she didn't already surpass Superwoman in all she's done so far, this feisty belle also commits murder. A Yankee deserter came upon her home and threatened her with more than just a robbery, if you get my drift. Scarlett then pulls out her father's revolver and shoots the guy in the head!

Soon after, the war ends. The carpet bagger and tax man then take over, and Scarlett realizes that cotton planting just wasn't going to cut it anymore. She has to make some money to support herself and her family somehow, but she has no cash or power; and the fact that she was a woman in that day and age also further hindered her prospects.

So what does Scarlett do? She marries her sister's boyfriend because he owned a store that was making some good coin. He also had a lumber mill on the side, so that didn't hurt the pocketbook, either. Eventually, through marrying her sister's boyfriend, Scarlett is able to come by enough money to not only save her home and her family, but she then goes on to take over the entire lumber mill!

Without the seal of approval from her husband, or most of the people in Atlanta for that matter, Scarlett turns the lumber mill into the most prosperous business in the city. She even takes to driving her own carriage which shocks people even more because women just did not do that sort of thing.

Later on in the movie, Scarlett husband's gets killed, and she shows little remorse; after all, she had only married him to gain access to his financial resources and influence over people. So, now with the war over and her husband as dead as a doorknob, Scarlett not only has the lumber mill, but she takes over the store as well, acquiring much more money and power.

Like so many of us bitches, one might say Scarlett had to face the disdain of others because she worked hard and eventually rose above her detractors. While many of the people were living in poverty and despair because they wallowed in self pity and refused to do business with the Yankees, Scarlett had a grip on reality. She knew that she couldn't live in the past, and so she moved on and became the richest woman in Atlanta.

In the end, Scarlett had all the power and money she could have ever dreamed of. True, she did this at a price of losing both her child and her true love (Clark Gable), but she did not lay down and die from her misfortunes. After having a good cry, she instead picked herself up and went on with her life because, after all, tomorrow was another day, and bitches never give up the good fight!

Girls, Girls, Girls

Mike Ox

Back in the day growing up in suburbia I lived a simple life. I was like most other boys, playing for hours on end, easily distracted from the goings on around me, and pretty much without a care in the world.

This philosophy I applied to all aspects of my life. I knew certain rules and the repercussions if I broke them. There were things that I understood like: if I stick my fingers in there— it will hurt, and if you raise your hand and pretend to know the answer, the teacher may not call on you. Yet there was one thing that escaped me. One significant part of my life that I just couldn't put my finger on was girls.

Even harder to explain than girls themselves was their actions. And maybe that's why on that warm summer day I started to see things in a different light. Playing as I normally do, at recess, I was approached by little Jenny Carlson. Now Jenny and I sat next to each other in class, talked about politics and world issues, and I thought we were, what most might consider, friends. But today she walked up to me, smiled, and punched me in the arm. I couldn't understand why she hit me. I mean I knew why Billy Mathers hit me, cause I called him a naked booby star, but Jenny, I just didn't get it.

Perplexed I took this little incident home and asked my dad. That's when he took me aside. The look on his face turned somber. He tilted his head back, as if looking for inner strength, closed his eyes, took a deep breath and said: "Son, I know you're five, but there's a few things I have to tell you about women. You see..." "I listened for hours. When it came up in his sermon that the harder a girl hits you the more she likes you, I knew that something would be with me forever. The stories he told were like from some great book of men's failures and accomplishments. (He told me later that I would receive the How To Be a Man handbook on my 13th birthday.) Knowledge like that you don't forget.

Now I don't know if I received this information sooner than the rest of the boys, but I understood what was going on. I continued to play and be like any other five year old maintaining my immaturity. Granted much hasn't changed, but I still have managed to carry this wealth of knowledge to this day and will pass my wisdom onto you.

There's this girl I know. I sit next to her in class. We talk about politics and other world events. She hit me the other day... hard. I think she likes me... a lot.

Shopping Sucks

MIKE OX

The other day I took it upon myself to purchase a pair of shoes. This required me to journey to the largest mall Mecca in the known universe: West Edmonton Mall. My logic being, that if you can't find what you want there, it does not exist.

The shoes that I required were of the running variety. Now I don't fancy myself an athlete by any means, but I thought I should bring my heart rate up from its' comatose state. Little did I realize the epiphany that would ensue on my little mall excursion.

Now don't get me wrong I don't mind shopping in the least. I buy what I need, impulse or not, and there are a few rules I follow, that most others do not. First of all— get in and get out. Rule number 2— get out of my way. Because of rule 1 am moving at a rate of flattening one child per 3 steps. Move, and I don't mean the side to side head fakes, I mean jump immediately out of my path.

Nothing pisses off me more than having to decelerate. More than that nothing makes me angrier than having to come to an abrupt halt. Who just walks at a leisurely pace and then stops in the middle of nowhere, for no reason, as if hitting an invisible wall?

At this point in my shopping excursion the "mall rage" sets in and the mental acts of violence ensue. Now I'm sure if I punched everyone I wanted to in the mall, it would be harder to walk over the bodies strewn about, but there is a certain pleasure in thinking about giving that lady in the Mickey Mouse sweatshirt and leather jacket with tassels in the acid wash jeans a good shot in the melon. Or that family of twelve who are all holding hands and walking shoulder to shoulder through the mall a good ol' fashioned shit-kicking.

Well I started to believe that the shoes I was looking for did not exist. I don't know when or why it happened, but shoes today are goddamn ugly. I saw a pair of gold basketball shoes for over $250.00 and I thought to myself. "Who in there right mind would buy a pair of these spaceboots?" Needless to say, I found a decent pair and have since left them in their box and taken up Sony Playstation.

For the future however, I am going to let a few of you in on a little secret before the upcoming holidays make me go postal. I don't want to get into the details, but at a certain age in a boys life his father initiates him into the rites of manhood read from the manual passed on from generation to generation. In a nutshell there is a reason why men wait until December 24 to shop. First of all they are all men, all obeying the same rules. There is no eye contact, even less chit chat, method of payment is in hand before the cashier is reached, you buy the first thing that your gut tells you to (that's what return policies are for), if you think she'll like it she won't... and so on.

Having said all this, I will inform you that I will be shopping at WEM this weekend so stay home or get out of my way.

A NIGHT TO REMEMBER

Johnny Boy

Remembrance Day not only gave us time to remember those that have died to save our country. It also gave us an extra day to drink without having to worry about getting up for classes the next day. There were many technologies that took advantage of this holiday and one of those were the good people at BAS who held their "Night to Remember" cabaret at Cowboy's.

There were drink specials to be had and as an added bonus, the Mechanical Bull was on hand to embarrass those that thought they could tame it. The Bull was a hot item at around 11 when everyone had a couple of drinks in them. Yours truly had a couple of drinks and tried to tame the bull. Let me just say this, it wasn't pretty.

After the incident with the bull I tried to keep a low profile, and what better place to keep a low profile than on the dance floor. With the cabaret as well as the CFR finishing up for the day, the place was packed with partiers. Once I actually weaseled my way on to the dance floor, I came to a realization, there were women surrounding me. There was a serious shortage of men, and I was in heaven. I would like to take this opportunity to apologize to all of the ladies for the incident with the sock, I thought I was being funny.

After yet another embarrassing moment, the evening started to take on a haze. I do remember a few details though, including a shouting match with Abloe Green.

I don't know about the rest of you, but I had a blast. For those of you that didn't make it out, make sure you do next time. Until then remember these words to live by, "it all made sense at the time".

SHIELDS VS. THE MECHANICAL BULL

"The Fist Finally Takes a Lickin' "

JAMES OLSON

I wouldn't have believed it if I hadn't seen it myself.

But it was pretty goddamned funny.

I arrived at the BAS Cabaret fashionably late, with only one beer in me and angry at the world because of some "difficulties" I'd been having.

So I downed a couple of cold ones, grabbed a couple more and ventured off into the great unknown to find my friends. That's when I saw it. Shields handing over three dollars with this crazy look in his eyes. "Noooooooo!" I yelled.

Unfortunately, Cowboy traffic did not allow me to make it on time and before I knew it, John was seated atop the Mechanical Bull. So, rather than spoil his mood, I sat back and watched.

It was a short performance.

I don't know a whole lot about physics, but John on top of that mechanical bull was enough to make me lose confidence in the entire NASA space program. It was a sight to behold.

I didn't look at my watch, but I'm guessing maybe one or one and a half seconds and John was thrown clear from any danger. I was still laughing when John brought out his hammer.

Like a flash of light, John moved in on the Bull, grimacing like some kind of deranged lunatic. He got about three or four good "hammerin's" before three Cowboy's bouncers pinned him to the ground and removed the hammer from his hand.

John was, as usual, asked to leave the premises and is currently being sued by Cowboys for $3000 dollars. In regards to the legal action, a Cowboys staff member was also quoted saying, "Look, we don't want to sue him. We just want the Bull's head back."

Shields is reportedly pursuing legal actions of his own; he's planning on suing the Mechanical Bull for extreme mental anguish.

The minds of three U of A grads, Kingsley Leung, Mel Kunico, and Candace Korchinsky have met to produce something you need to see; a website that isn't trying to shove credit cards and volkswagons down your throat.

What won't they think of next?

The website (www.marketpenetration.net) came online July 31st of this year and by the looks of things, is more than ready to carry all 2 million of us post-secondary's into the 21st Century.

What is there for you @ MarketPenetration.net?

- MZine - an online magazine devoted to students, complete with student submissions on a wide variety of subjects from education to entertainment, through finance and travel
- Clickzone - links to the top five Canadian sites as ranked by Canadian students
- And a whole whack of other stuff, including an online newsletter, open bulletin service and chat/discussion room

From my interview with the atomic trio of Market Penetration (MP), I can encapsulate the enigma of this new website in one word: vision and ability. Well, I guess that's three words, but you get my point. Rarely, if ever, do you come across a website these days that doesn't have a hundred and one banners staring you in the face before you dare to click even once. MP has risen above the status quo of the economically obsessed Internet.

The boys and girls of MP (right to left): Mel Kunico, Kingsley Leung, and Candace Korchinsky.

Kelly Henschel

Their goals are valiant and dignified; to serve the student population. And that isn't easy-students have an uncanny ability to smell bullsh*t from miles away. While MP does have close ties to companies such as General Motors, the website does away with the traditional in-your-face aura of net-advertising. They do have a section dedicated to student products and services, but if you don't want it, you don't get it.

"The goal of Market Penetration is to become an all-encompassing student website. Canada is a big country, we hope to get students thinking past sheer geographical barriers and realize that they are part of the national student community," says Kingsley Leung, co-founder of Market Penetration.

And the best thing about MP.net? You can contribute. That's right folks! You can submit absolutely any item of your choice and if you make the cut, you can e-mail all your friends and tell them to check it out on the Market Penetration website. Beautiful, isn't it?

Here's the kicker: if you want to review a CD, movie, restaurants, computer games- even a bar for net's sakes -drop a line to Candace at info@marketpenetration.net and see what those nice folks at MP can do for you. There is no end to what these magical people can do.

And all of you know I don't stick my stamp of approval on much these days.

Women's Volleyball

Johnny Boy

The women's Volleyball squad had a home and home series this weekend against cross-town rivals, the Grant MacEwen Griffins. In an effort to increase fan attendance at the games, the Athletics Dept. managed to team up with Boston Pizza and set up a little rivalry between the two teams. The winning school would get specials and discounts at their local Boston Pizza.

Unfortunately for the girls, the Griffins proved to be too much for the team and they lost both games of the series. Adding insult to injury, Grant MacEwen was able to get more fans out to their game, than we were. Although a total of 175 fans showed up for the girls game at NAIT it wasn't enough to beat the Griffins in the pizza contest.

In case you missed out on the action this weekend, why don't you try to make it out to the girls next game, this Friday night at 6:30pm in the NAIT gym.

The Battle of Alberta

Being Average Sucks!?!?

With the Chimp on the IR, Kelly Ainsworth started between the pipes for the Ooks on Saturday night. Right from the get-go the Ooks were put at a disadvantage by having two key players unable to dress: Greg Martinuik was suffering from "head in the toilet bowl" syndrome and Knees Beaulieu's old body was so sore to skate.

When playing in Calgary any Edmonton College team will encounter bad officiating, well there was no difference for the Ooks on Saturday. With players like Ryan Begley, Allan O'Toole, Shawn Villeneuve, and Jay McGee constantly playing well the other fellows followed their lead to pursue a victory instead of an excuse.

Short-handed for the majority of the game, the Ooks continuously kept plugging. Jeff Ainsworth continued to lead the team by example with his hard-nosed style of play, which created plenty of scoring chances for his linemates. With numerous 5 on 3's the Trojans were unable to bag the victory thanks to some superb penalty killing and great saves from Kelly "Beefcake" Ainsworth. SAIT opened the scoring in the first only to have Aaron Millar return the favor with his second of the weekend. SAIT's overly aggressive style of play had little effect on the Ooks, as they kept their emotions in check and battled through this and some questionable calls from Mr. Zebra.

Bernie Paranteau scored in the second and sent both clubs into the locker rooms tied at 2. A power-play goal early in the third by Trojan forward Craig Billick stood as the winner until six minutes left in the third. Defenceman/forward Brad McCorry tied the game at three with a slap shot from outside the Trojans blue line, but like Kraft Dinner, the cheese was good and the teams were headed for overtime.

OT settled nothing, which meant, oh yes, the glorious shoot-out. Stacked with plenty of scoring prowess and solid goaltending, the Ooks match up with any team in the ACAC when it comes to the 1 on 1 skills competition of a shoot-out. Ainsworth allowed one goal on the breakaways while Paranteau, Begley, and Millar scored to give the Ooks a weekend split with the SAIT Rubbers.

A Kook in the Stands

For those of you that actually bothered to stick around last weekend, our mighty hockey Ooks took on their hated Alberta rivals, the SAIT Trojans. There is a history already this season between these teams, and it isn't filled with daisies. On hand for the bout, was Dr. Sam Shaw, President of NAIT, as well as a group of Kooks who were organized by 'The King of the Kooks', with a little help from the Nugget's Max Power.

Someone actually let Gongshow have a bullhorn so you could say that there wasn't a soul in the building that didn't know that the Kooks were there. There were the standard hockey chants as well as some disparaging comments hurled randomly at SAIT players. When asked for a comment on the game, the crowd replied with "N-A-I-T".

The game was also host to the most active Oook mascot that has been seen for a while in the arena. The Oook really managed to get the crowd going, and took it to heart when the Trojans scored, taking his frustrations out on an innocent garbage container.

Although the game started out well for the squad, quickly managing to pot two goals early, unfortunately it didn't last long with the Trojans coming on strong in the second to beat the hometown Ooks, by a score of 5-3.

Even though the game ended in a loss, Oook fans can take solace in the fact that NAIT went down to Calgary on Saturday night and showed 'em who's boss in a shootout victory.

For those of you that missed it, you might want to wander down to the NAITSA office and sign up for this weekend's fan bus to Calgary. The trip will include beer, as well as watching the Ooks stick it to Mount Royal. As an added bonus, there will be refreshments on the bus, what more can you ask for?

Da Worm

It was a weekend series that could have lead into an excellent second semester. It would have given the NAIT Men's Volleyball team a free pass into the ACAC playoffs. These matches should have placed the Ooks as one of the top four teams in the country.

Could've, Would've, Should've. It is all just talk unless actions can replace words and a group of people can rise to the occasion and become a team. Against cross-town rivals GMCC the Ooks men played an average game against an average team and we walked away with the victory. As the coach of the team I had a couple doubts at our Saturday meeting. I am not sure if it was because they thought GMCC would roll over or if they believed that they played good enough on Friday that they could repeat the effort and be handed the win. Either way, as the coach, I let it slide because I have a bad habit of over thinking some of the little things. With that being said, we got our asses kicked on Saturday by a GMCC team that played very solid in their home gym and would not give up the chance to advance to the playoffs.

A couple different things could happen over the next few weeks that will dictate the path the men's volleyball team must take. 1). The Ooks must go undefeated over the next two weekends. 2). The Ooks must rely on both GPRC and Lakeland to defeat the Griffins. If both of these things happen we are still guaranteed a spot in the play-offs. If either one of them does not occur, the men's team will be fighting it out during the second semester to earn the final spot in the ACAC final tournament.

Thank you to the fans that helped us in the BP's fan contest this weekend.

One last note: Keep your head up Erica.....

Riding High At The Canadian Finals Rodeo

Shannon & Jessica

We are both born and raised city girls so the word "rodeo" wasn't in our vocabulary. Our idea of a good time just didn't involve stinky barnyard animals (unless they were men!). So, when the entertainment editor (Curtis) came to us with the CFR assignment, he had to present it to us in totally different aspect. "Hey girls," Curtis said "how would you like to spend your weekend staring at a bunch of cowboy's tight-asses?" After pondering on the idea, we decided to take the assignment.

With that said, we had an awesome time! Not only were there a ton of nice asses, there was also every thing from barrel racing, to guys getting thrown around on mean bulls, to cute little kids riding sheep.

Once we threw a little beer into the equation it only got better. In just two and a half hours we saw bareback riding (for obvious reasons Shannon's favorite), steer wrestling, novice bareback riding, novice saddle bronc riding, boys steer riding, calf roping, saddle bronc riding, ladies barrel racing, and bull riding (Jessica's favourite).

There were over 14,000 people in attendance at the Saturday matinee, of which we would estimate that at least 80% of people were decked out in full cowboy attire. To dress like a cowboy one must wear the tightest wranglers on the market, dirty cowboy hats and contrasting plaid shirts.

The Canadian Finals Rodeo is one of the fastest growing sporting events in the entire country (much to our surprise). Each year, men and women compete in various events in which they can earn big bucks. The top ten money winners in each of the six categories then move on to compete for National titles. The first CFR ever was held in 1974. In 1974 24,499 people attended the festivities and prize money added up to $29,478. Now compare that to 1998's stats, where 91,105 people were in attendance and prize money was $505,620!!!

We must salute all the cowboys and girls who are brave enough to actually attempt these events. We would never be caught dead riding a bull...we were scared enough as it was when one passed in front of us and there was a fence protecting us!! If you missed the fun this year, make sure you catch it next year.

Our only recommendation is this...Do not sit in the front row unless you enjoy having dirt and manure flung at you every time an animal runs by!! Shannon wants to take this opportunity to thank all the young cowboys for coming out and showing her their tight little bums.

One Hell Of a Tea Party!

Agnieszka Kulik

Two words can sum up Saturday night's edwin and Tea Party concert: "yummy" and "wow".

The word "yummy" goes to edwin. A hormonal storm erupted as soon as he appeared on stage in a pair of...well, yummy black leather pants. He could easily give Ricky Martin a run for his money in the sex symbol department. However, despite his strong voice, I found many of his songs to be uninspiring. The few numbers I had heard previously came off strained and sadly lacking the digital gloss that a studio recording can give you. Perhaps, too, he should have a chat with his technical crew because his voice was all but drowned out by the percussion. Oh well, the girls in the audience didn't seem to care. Like I said, the man IS yummy.

The "wow" definitely goes to the Tea Party who put on a fantastic show. They were great vocally and musically, with their usual array of strange and exotic instruments. They threw in a Jimi Hendrix tune and even did a great rendition of Leonard Cohen's "Alleluia", though I have a nagging suspicion I was the only one in the audience who'd ever heard of him. Our Edmonton audience had such a high level of energy I think even the world-weary musicians were impressed when they came out for their encore. I found, at one point, however, that my attention drifted to "all the pretty colours" and I had to stop inhaling the second-hand smoke from all the, ahem, herbal cigarettes everyone was smoking.

There was some maniacal body surfing going on and watching the flailing limbs of the less successful surfers was almost as entertaining as the show. Overall, the Tea Party were well worth the price. They have a great stage presence that is based on talent, not looks, and were definitely a great show.

HORRORSCOPES

DARIA MORGAN

Capricorn (December 22-January 20) I know this is comes a little late, but when it was suggested that you shop naked this past weekend, they meant on-line...

Aquarius (January 21-February 18) The phrase "Fling me a spicy burrito, Stanley!" will bring you a week filled with sexual intrigue if you use it the right away.

Pisces (February 19-March 20) Looking to scare off roommates/significant others? Get a teddy bear to sleep with, and then in the middle of the night, punch it really hard in the head a few times, screaming, "Shut up, Mr. Teddy! Shut up!" This tactic works like a charm.

Aries (March 21-April 19) This week, you will discover a trick to make those boring classes a little more interesting — picture everyone with ferrets in heat clinging to their heads.

Taurus (April 20-May 20) You will develop the extremely rare "Perky Disease" and will start having a strange compulsion to shoot everyone you see with a tranquilizer gun.

Gemini (May 21-June 20) You will answer the phone today screaming, "You bloated sack of cat boogers!" for no particular reason (it'll just be one of those unexplained urges). Much to your chagrin, however, the person on the other end will be your mom.

Cancer (June 21-July 22) In one of those amusing mishaps that happen occasionally in life, a friend of yours will have mistaken your reference to "her suit" and thought you said "hirsute". Still, this may prove a little embarrassing...

Leo (July 23-August 22) Remember: it usually helps convince everyone you are right if you jump up and down and yell.

Virgo (August 23-September 22) This would be a good time to get out there and make a difference! I'm often tempted to do the same, but I can never figure out where "there" is (I'm directionally challenged).

Libra (September 23-October 22) This week you will feel like turnip, just not like having any (you're weird).

Scorpio (October 23-November 21) Don't be afraid to reach out and spank someone! Secretly, deep down, it's what we all want. Really.

Sagittarius (November 22-December 21) Your incisors will seem to be getting longer today, and you will find sunlight hurts your eyes. Probably just a hangover though, and nothing to really worry about.

If Today Is Your Birthday: Nobody will understand you today, and it will be impossible to get the simplest idea across. For example, even such a basic concept as, "Please untie me and take this gag out of my mouth" will only cause people to stare at you in confusion.

Curtis's Video Corner

Curtis Comeau

November 23, "Entrapment" star Ring Sean Connery and Catherine Zeta Jones is released to video. Connery plays a master thief who teams up with Zeta-Jones to commit the best scam of the millennium. "Entrapment" is easily the best cat bugler movie that has been released to date. Qui Gon Gin's new movie...Oh, I'm sorry.... Liam Neisson's new movie "The Haunting" is yet another of Hollywood's over budget horror films. The effects are outstanding but the story is really lame. South Park the movie has also made it's way to video, and the creators obviously still have a low budget. The animation is brutal but the story line makes up for it.

Blade,
Once again you go on opening your mouth about "the Doc" without knowing any facts. First of all, "The Doc" does have a blow up doll. He names her Blade II, because both of you are alike (dead in bed). Second of all, guys like Slick Nick and "the Doc" are never lonely. The difference is he gets all of "the Doc's" leftovers. Finally, the reason why the egos are so big is that the pee-ons, such as yourself, make them big. Blade "know your role and shut your mouth" just like you used to do when you got played.

Yiannis Taverna

10444 - 82 Avenue
Phone: 433-6768

Athenaeus once said, "We may live with out poetry, music, and art; we may live without conscience and without heart; we may live without friends and we may live without books; but civilized man cannot live without cooks."

The interior of Yiannis is modelled after a contemporary design of a 1930's Greek Taverna. In actuality, the word "Taverna" describes a specific style of a restaurant that is fun and festive.

And what do I mean by fun?

Well, on any given Friday or Saturday night, it is not uncommon to see all the servers join up and do what they call the Zorba line dance. The diners must pay attention when the servers are doing the Zorba, because once they have finished, it's the diners' turn.

"Everyone in the restaurant gets up and joins in on the line dance. It's a lot of fun for everyone," said manager Tammy Anast, "However during the week, we usually don't do the dancing, because the crowd is a little more quiet."

Yiannis offers a wonderful assortment Mezethes (appetizers) and Apto Furno's (meals from the oven). "Greek food is rich in history," said our server, George Kourouniotis (a native of Athens, Greece), "Its roots date back thousands of years." Since our server was, in fact, a native from Greece, we asked him to choose for us, some of the more common meals that we might have if we lived there.

"Many of the Greek dishes are made specifically for sharing," commented George, "As a result, the Greeks tend to eat off small sharing plates very similar to little appetizer plates."

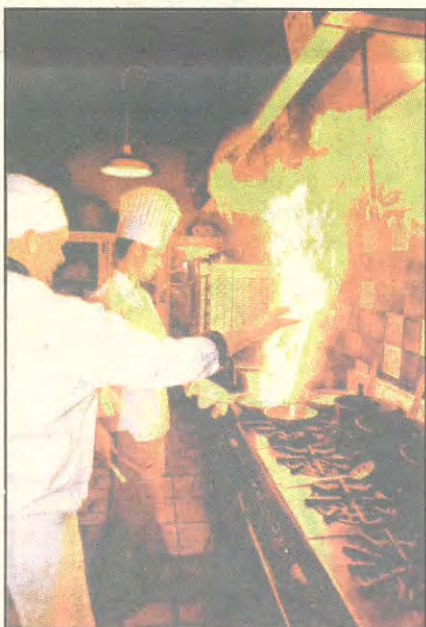

On that note, he then brought us a huge platter of food that introduced us to many exotic items. Some of my favorites on the platter were the Dolmades (seasoned meat and rice wrapped tightly in grape leaves) and the Spanakopita (a light pastry layered with spinach and creamy feta cheese). Greek salad was also a favorite of the many interesting items that we tried. The tomatoes, onions, peppers, cucumbers, and feta cheese do a fine job in hiding the fact that traditional Greek salad contains no lettuce.

Although we did not indulge in any Greek wine, the story behind it's origin is very interesting: Thousands of years ago, Athens was taken over by the Turks. In an attempt to spoil the Greeks's wine reserves, the Turks contaminated all the wine with pine resin. The Greeks ended up enjoying the bitter tasting wine, however, and as a result, claimed it as their own. "Retsina," as it is now called, is, in fact, patented by Greece.

To close out our remarkable evening, we were given the opportunity to try Yiannis's special dessert — the Ek Mek. Once again perfect for sharing, the Ek Mek is a layered dessert with fresh whipped cream and vanilla pudding.

As for Athenaeus's poem, I think that he was right in saying that we cannot live without cooks; however the cook's food tastes much better when it is eaten in a fun and lively atmosphere such as Yiannis.

Two of the talented cooks.

She is Coming

Part 2

COMEAU

American recording giants, Garth Brooks and Trisha Yearwood, Martina McBride and the Dixie Chicks can thank their lucky stars that Canadian country singer Patricia Conroy was born. Had it not been for Patricia, the Dixie Chicks and Martina McBride wouldn't have had that crucial first music hit, and the duet of Garth and Trisha wouldn't have been such a success.

Back in 1992 on Patricia's second album, she recorded a top10 single called My Baby Loves Me. As soon as it was released, new comer Martina McBride borrowed Patricia's hit to help elevate her career. Strangely, Patricia received no credit for the song.

Then came, Garth Brooks and Trisha Yearwood who decided to "borrow" Wild as the Wind off Patricia's new album, which was already entitled Wild as the Wind. Singing their "borrowed" song as a duet, Garth and Trisha made a significant mark on the music charts, while leaving Patricia, once again, in the dust.

One song that was supposed to be released on Patricia's Wild as the Wind album, but was cut out, is I Can Love You Better. "One day I turned on the TV and there were the Dixie Chicks, singing my song I Can Love You Better; as a result, I decided to cut that song out of my album," Said Conroy in an in-

It's headed right for us and there's not a soul in Edmonton who can hide from it. Have no doubts this is as real as it gets.

Some of the younger Pokemon fans...

Those cute little cartoon characters known as Pokemon, invaded Edmonton's theaters Friday November 12.

The Saturday before I attended an open screening of "Pokemon the first movie", I will be the first to tell you, that it is a BIG mistake to joke around with small Pokemon fans, let me explain... While waiting for the movie to start I decided to amuse myself. So I walked down to a bunch of the eagerly anticipating kids that told them that the movie was being cancelled. Within seconds, tears were flowing like the Nile river. After a good laugh I decided to end the joke, and eventually the tears turned into sobs and then finally the sobs stopped.

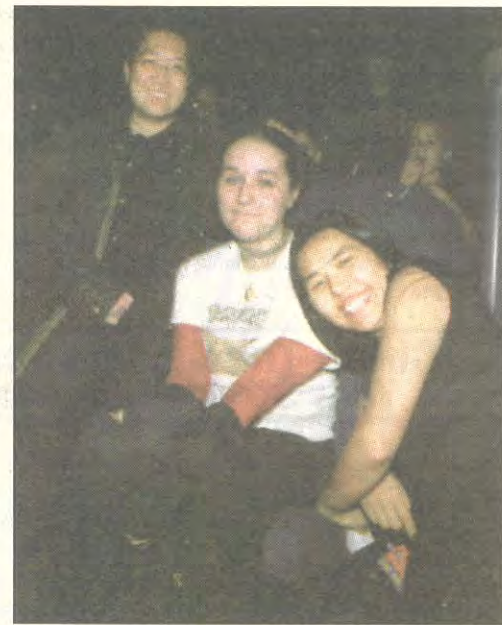

Young children weren't the only patrons eagerly awaiting the release of "Pokemon the first movie" at least half of the theater was full of young adults who have also jumped on the Pokemon bandwagon.

Un-like the TV cartoon "Pokemon the first movie" is dark and spooky. "It's definitely geared towards older children," said Jane Davis a parent of a 6 year old. "Younger children like my daughter may be frightened by the shockingly real animation."

Even though I'm not the most avid Pokemon fan I found that their first movie was rather entertaining. However I don't suggest paying $8.50 to see it, wait till it hit's the cheap theaters.

If you don't believe me that this Pokemon craze is for real, just wait until Christmas: when mom's will be breaking out the boxing gloves just to get little Johnny that Pikachu doll he wants.

...and some of the older ones.

terview with Tyler McCleod of the Calgary Sun.

Even though Patricia has been stiffed out of several (of her own) hits, she keeps an amazingly positive out look on life. "I guess I really know how to pick a hit" she laughs. Although she does receive some royalties for each of the songs that have been "acquired" by the American recording artists, It would be nice for her to receive some of the credit, after all it's not always about money.

Keep in mind that Patricia will be performing at the Nest, next Thursday. It's going to be one hell of a show. Tickets are available at the NAITSA office in room E-131.
