Panel slams Tories on education

By LISI MONRO
Nugget Student Issues Editor

The University of Alberta Students' Union hosted a panel discussion last Thursday to discuss tuition and other issues facing students in the post secondary education system. The meeting's original purpose was to discuss a tuition policy that was supposed to have been handed down to Alberta post secondary institutions by the provincial government at the beginning of October.

This purpose shifted; because by the time the forum took place the tuition policy still hadn't been received from the government as was promised more than 18 months ago.

A number of panelists took part in the forum, which was intended to start discussion within the campus community on the state of post secondary funding in the province.

Samantha Power - the president of the U of A Students' Union, Dave Taylor - the Liberal Party's Advanced Education Critic and MLA from Calgary, David Eggen - the NDP MLA from Edmonton/Calder, Bill Moore Kilgannon - the Executive Director of Public Interest Alberta, and Elaine Ho - a former student leader, all took part.

An invitation had also been extended to Denis Herard, who is the current Minister of Advanced Education. Herard chose not to participate in the forum.

"Students need to know what was promised to them by the provincial government. That is the most affordable tuition policy in the country, and what that actually means. It is unfortunate that the Minister has yet to respond, and it seems like he will not participate in this conversation with students," said David Cournoyer, Vice President (external) from the U of A's Student's Union.

Among topics discussed were the rising cost of tuition; the passing of Bill 40 (which according to critics eliminates any rules or caps governing the rise of tuition); the ability (or lack thereof) of university governing bodies to fight education cutbacks; the student loans system and the government's failure to improve it; or even uphold the quality of education in the province over the past two decades.

Samantha Power, President of the U of A's Student's Union, also states, "This institution could have chosen 15 years ago not to accept cutbacks.

This institution now has that same choice again, and is not taking it."

Some interesting figures were raised about NAIT in particular in relation to the funding that it receives. On average, the institution will turn away five students for every one student that is accepted into a program.

The University of Alberta Students' Union along with other Alberta post secondary institutions continue to await the government's promised tuition policy. They hope they will receive a plan that will begin to address some of the fundamental problems with tuition and debt affecting students in Alberta.

Radio tax attacked

By STACEY DOUGLAS
Nugget Student Editor

Campus online radio stations across Canada may be experiencing financial difficulty this spring if a new fee is put through by the Society of Composers, Authors, and Music Publishers, or SOCAN.

SOCAN collects the licensing fees for music that is broadcast either commercially or in a non-commercial matter, ensuring musicians are paid for their work.

Presently SOCAN requires a non-commercial AM or FM radio station to pay 1.9% of the station's gross operating costs in the year covered by the license, but this does not include online campus radio broadcasts.

However, if Tariff 22 for the Communications of Musical Works via the Internet or Similar Transmission Facilities is passed there would be a mandatory fee of 7.5% of an online station's annual revenue or $200 - whichever amounts to more - for the station to continue to have a licence to broadcast.

For some stations this added financial pressure may mean that the online broadcasts will end, so the National Campus and Community Radio Association, or NCRA, is protesting the possible tariff.

According to the NCRA's most recent newsletter the organization "agrees with SOCAN in the sense that all art has a value. Artists should receive royalties for the public performance of their music... The problem occurs when SOCAN moves to ignore the artists' desire to have their music promoted - something that stations naturally provide by web casting their regular feed. The reality of the campus and community radio sector is that stations, faced with increased monthly fees, will simply be forced to pull their Internet feed. Some stations have already done so."

NR92, NAIT's own campus online radio station, is an integral teaching tool in the radio program at NAIT; but it is also an important part of the campus lifestyle since it plays outside NAITSA, in the South Lobby, and in the RTA wing. As well by going to the NR92 website, <http://www.nait.ca/nr92/>, and clicking on the "Listen Live" button one is able to listen to the "Station for the Students" on any computer with an internet connection.

According to Patrick Galenza, Program Head of the RTA program, "Tariff 22 is another cost to the program, but because NR92 is such a large teaching tool in the program the fee would be absorbed. We try to make it as true to life for students here in RTA."

As Dave Albright, a radio instructor in the RTA program says, "the unfortunate bottom line for NR92 would be a $2,400 a year fee to broadcast. My opinion, it's a cost of doing business. Not a fair tax for an education station, but SOCAN's intent is in the right place."

Gym-haters, don't worry

By STEPHANIE TOFFOLO

By now I think it's safe to say that you've probably settled into "student life." Having gotten your schedule and classes down to a pretty swift routine, and more than likely you have discovered the nearest watering hole and partaken in some form of entertainment - partying at the Nest or cheering for our Ook athletes perhaps.

Let's face it, the life of a student is a busy one. Juggling homework, a part-time job, social endeavours, friends and family - it can leave you feeling drained; and with subtle reminders of mid-terms just around the corner even a little stressed-out.

Where does exercise fit in? While it may seem an impossible feat, there are many options offered by Campus Sport & Wellness. Including the gymnasium, weight room, 50-meter pool, ice arena, as well as racquetball and squash courts.

There is also a wide range of intramural sports and activity programs opened to all. Pop in for a visit at Room E-134 or give them a call at 471-7713 for more information on dates and times.

If this doesn't seem to be your "thing" you're in luck, because against popular belief maintaining a 'keep fit' lifestyle doesn't mean being confined to a sweaty gym, or feeling self-conscious about your coordination as you bounce around an aerobics studio. Community events in Edmonton and the surrounding areas are alternate ideas that are a sure way to keep you feeling great and even having fun! Choose an activity that you actually enjoy and you're more likely to stick with it. Need some ideas, check out www.actedmonton.ca.

As for the facts, being active is an opportunity to meet up with friends or make new ones. Better general fitness will help to build stronger bones and muscles; and will help keep you from putting on weight (especially as the beer drinking/hockey cheering winter months will soon be upon us).

You'll feel a sense of achievement, and to top the list off, exercise is one of the best physical stress-reduction techniques available. Exercise not only improves your health and reduces stress it also relaxes tense muscles and helps you to sleep.

So as you ponder your next step, just remember that the human body was designed to be active every day!

As the head of the Dolphin Space Exploration Program (DSEP) you've been more than pleased with the progress your department has made in the field of launching the bodies of dolphins out of the Earth's atmosphere and into orbit to explore the stars.

More than a few critics have called your life's work "a waste of resources," or "A disgusting disregard for marine life," but you know better.

Only dolphins and babies can survive the rigours of deep space travel without a life suit. And since you couldn't find any babies, you've been launching dolphins.

It's only a matter of time before one of them returns with proof of extra-terrestrial life. So far, there's been nothing. But any day now they'll be back.

Suddenly, you hear your name being bellowed. You turn sharply from your powerful TI-83 graphing calculator to find Major Tom Skipjack standing behind you. He's furious.

The Major has long been an outspoken critic of your work; and for years it's been a battle trying to survive his intrusions into your project.

"What are you doing, you idiot!?" Skipjack roars, "We lost eighteen more men today at the launch!"

"Major," you reply calmly, "It is a tragedy to be sure, but dolphin-science must go forward, and their deaths were unavoidable."

"You turned the burners on while they were still underneath the rockets!" he yells as the vein on his forehead bulges, "You need to be shut down son! This time I'm going to see you're finished for good!"

"No!" you shout, "You can't rob the future of space-knowledge, I won't allow it!"

You begin to stand, but the Major pushes you back into your beanbag chair.

"Sit down and stay down," he says, "this whole complex is under lock down until I contact the Prime Minister."

"Oh no," You think, "Skipjack's serious this time! I could lose my funding for sure!"

You decide it's time to take drastic measures.

- Editorial -

Promotion is a bit Goofy

When did post secondary education start needing Disneyland to entice prospective students? Is NAIT really this Mickey Mouse that the powers that be feel it necessary to offer a free trip to the happiest place on earth to attract people to its open house this weekend?

The fact that 82% of the graduates in 2005 available for employment found full time work in their chosen field of study, while almost 4% found part-time jobs should be enough for potential students. If not do we really want these people taking up space in our school?

The Goofys of the world should spend more time figuring out what they want to do with their life rather than wasting our time dicking around in school. We've all had at least one or two in class who make us wonder why they're here. It's not like there isn't a plethora of jobs out there currently for them to work at, while they decide what they want to do with the rest of their lives.

However, that being said, for the most part students at NAIT have an urgency unlike other post secondary institutions like university; where a four-year degree can easily take six years if you let it. Here it's get in, get it done, and get out.

It seems that most people walk faster down the hallways, the group work and projects come sooner, and the semester goes into fast forward mode by the end of the first week. This is not a bad thing.

Sure it's stressful, but sooner rather than later we'll be participating meaningfully in the working world climbing and eventually reaching our lofty goals – hopefully. However, to get through the stress of school it helps if you want to be here; and once through the rigours of academia there are only more rigours in the working world to experience.

Open House allows for potential students to interact directly with current students and staff to see if this is the place for them – a place that will help them in their journey towards a successful career.

Perhaps we're too hasty here at the Nugget about Disneyland's place at Open House. Disneyland is the place where dreams come true, and in truth, for many of us NAIT, commences our journey towards professional fulfillment.

Should we shoot the messenger?

By JONNY FIVE
Opinion Column

You may be aware there were a series of shootings recently at various educational institutes in North America. These shootings began with the incident at Dawson College and ended (we hope) with the most recent tragedy in the Amish schoolhouse in Pennsylvania.

While these events are tragic, they are unfortunately not new. We all remember the high profile case of Columbine in 1999. As awful as it was, the "trench coat mafia" targeted their high school.

The more frightening aspect of the most recent cases, however, is the seemingly random targeting of schools and individuals.

What will stop these acts from being committed anywhere at any time? In my opinion, the modern news media plays a very large part in the prevention of these tragedies and they are not holding up their end.

It cannot be coincidence that these events happen in such rapid succession across the continent. Instead, a lethal mix of motivation and inspiration are at work.

The individuals who commit these terrible crimes are motivated to do so already. Hatred and confusion breed desperation, and like a pool of gasoline a spark is all that's needed.

I wonder if, while the network news media was in such a rush to get a cell phone video of the Montreal shootings to air, anyone stopped to consider the hazard this presented as a possible inspiration to copy cats.

Don't misunderstand me. I am a firm believer in the unbiased and free press, and I believe that journalism is one of the highest professions. I do not believe that a journalist's job is to simply present tragedy and to cause the audience to be fearful in their everyday lives.

There is a difference between what journalists present us with and what the worlds of Hollywood and popular music show us. Journalism is about reality not sensationalism, or at least it used to be.

In their rush to be the first to have a story or the goriest footage, our news agencies are doing us a great disservice. Not only are they exploiting tragedy for ratings, but they are providing the spark to copy cats out there that need only a little bit of inspiration to act.

The possibility exists that one of these desperate individuals could see these reports and commit a similar crime, yet he/she may not have before.

I am not suggesting that we should look at the world through rose colored glasses, or that these tragedies definitely could have been prevented by not reporting them. My point is that there are a lot of news stories out there that deserve more coverage than these horrible tragedies.

We should be focusing on events that shape the world we live in and foster greater understanding and prosperity for us as a species. There will always be tragic events, but media has a duty to not be consumed and dominated by them.

Tell the story about the school shooting, but don't dedicate three days to it underscored by "haunting" piano music. After all, vast numbers of people are dying every day in Afghanistan, Iraq, and Darfur – the list goes on and on.

Perhaps we should be focusing on attempting to understand thereby ending all murders in the world instead of just the ones at home.

We deserve a fair and balanced media that allows us to view our world in its entirety, and not just in tragic pieces.

STUDENTPOLITICS

Shant's Q&A as Senator

By LISI MONRO

Regularly in the Nugget we will pose questions to student politicians. This week we grill student senator Shant Chakmakian.

Shant Chakmakian

Q: As a computer engineering student, what are your areas of concern within your program that you feel need to be addressed; or that you feel you could affect directly as being a senator?

A: The Computer Engineering and Network Engineering programs are fairly demanding with heavy course loads; and I think that we need more tutors in those areas. In my conversations with students I see the need for this. We should also recognize all the amazing instructors who go out of their way to exceed their job requirements.

Q: What are some general NAIT student issues that you feel need to be addressed immediately? Was there any one particular issue that made you want to run for Senate?

A: Let's see... we need more tutors, more volunteers and more input from all students (good and bad). It would be great to address parking issues, which I've been looking into with ET;, and, of course, more people at the Nest!

There hasn't been any one particular issue that prompted me to run, other than my feeling that I can better serve NAIT by being a strong voice.

Q: How do you balance your time being a senator and other extra curricular activities with being a full time student?

A: It can be a challenge at times. I do a lot and I've learned a lot from my experiences with NAITSA. It has been the other half of my education.

It can be a pain during midterms, finals, or other projects; but the art of sacrifice is to know when to prioritize. It's a constant learning curve for all students.

Q) Have you heard from any students yet in terms of issues that they feel need solving or looking at?

A)I hear a lot of complaints and suggestions from students all over the place, ranging from parking inconveniences to their instructors being ineffective.

I do what I can to help and point them in the right direction when I can't. No matter how busy I am my "door is always open."

Part of what I love about this job is that I get to hear from students and address their needs.

If there's anything you'd like to share I welcome your input at shant\_c@hotmail.com.

Q: How did you get involved with the senate and with NAIT? Tell us a bit about your experiences at NAIT so far (i.e. how long have you been going to NAIT, what is the nature of your program, are there any other activities at NAIT you're involved with, your background before coming to NAIT e.g. traveling, or other post secondary education)?

A: Two years ago I was a part of General Council and supported the creation of the Senate, during which time I was concurrently enrolled in the Computer Network Administrator program.

So far, I've really enjoyed getting results for the students.

It is very rewarding when what you do allows you to help people, and teaches you so much in doing so. At first, I was just your average geek (and still am) but being involved in approving $3 million budgets for NAITSA can really teach a guy a lot.

These experiences have really helped me in my career as a Network Engineer.

But frankly despite whatever challenges I have to put up with the people are great! To quote Ralph Klein when I met him at his tribute "It's all about the people."

HOT SINGLES
OF THE WEEK

Photos: Brent Constantin

Magen Croft and Laurence Daher are a pair of hot singles photographed for this week's feature at NAIT's main campus.

Two single students for the price of one!

By BRENT CONSTANTIN

Adorable!

I'm gonna try something a little different this week: TWO singles at once. I know, I know, I'm out of control. It might not be something permanent (all depends how many of you little scamps e-mail me) but tell me what you think. Do they look too intimidating together - both of them staring into your soul and knowing your secrets? You're dirty! Filthy! Unclean! Or maybe not.

Laurence Daher

Laurence is 27 and in the Computer Network Administration Program here at NAIT. He's also the VERY FIRST person to contact me! Anyone that comes after Laurence will have to match his sheer level of enthusiasm at becoming the HSW too, his opening e-mail read as follows: "I'm tired of being single and alone in this world, where is my queen?"

B: So Laurence, what makes you hot?
L: I'm not sure. You'd have to ask the ladies.

B: Well, unfortunately, my deadline prohibits me from contacting any ladies. Could you paraphrase on their behalf?
L: Okay, well, I think they'd say I was a sweet person, driven to get what I want, with a good sense of humour. I also love to travel and I've been around the world. I'm also an archer and hope to compete in the 2012 Paralympics.

B: Wow, I can't even hold a bow without wounding myself. What aren't you looking for Laurence?
L: Anyone too full of themselves, or people that try to be something they're not.

Magen Croft

All day Friday, I had my crack team around campus assaulting girls (not literally) and trying to get them to be

HSW.
So if you were one of the ones who turned us down no hard feelings. Unless you're the group of girls that just laughed at us and then walked off without responding, because you're being withdrawn from your programs as you read this. Eventually I found Magen, a girl with great school spirit and an oddly spelled name. Magen is 20 and upgrading at NAIT, so she can get into the Police and Securities program at Grant MacEwan. She had a delicious bowl of pasta salad during our lunch-time interview.

B: Hey Magen, how are you?
M: Ahhh hurra whuh, hhuns. (Her mouth was full of salad at this point)

B: No problem. So tell me about yourself Magen.
M: I like to work out. I'm pretty easy going, and I like to make pottery too.

B: Pottery huh? I made an ashtray in Grade 4 for Mother's Day. My Mom threw it out and kept putting her smokes out on my arm. But that's neither here, nor there. What don't you look for in a guy?

M: I don't like selfish people, or guys who are cheap. In my last relationship I was going out with this guy for eight months who was in the army. He never even bought me flowers or anything.

B: Is he in Afghanistan now?
M: No, but I hope he goes.
B: Isn't it kind of dangerous.
M: Yes.
B: I won't press the issue.

If you're interested in becoming Laurence's Queen or Magen's Sugar Daddy please e-mail me at bconstantin1@ookmail.nait.ca and I'll pass it along! And hey, if you're a hot single what are you waiting for - someone to ask you out in grapevines? E-mail me so I can put you on display like a piece of meat!

Sharam dishes it out

Sharam Tayebi (of Deep Dish) at Fever Thursday, Oct. 5 Fever Nightclub

By TAZ DHARIWAL

Sharam Tayebi, one half of the Grammy award winning duo, Deep Dish was in town last Thursday night playing to a packed crowd at Fever in West Edmonton Mall. This was Sharam’s third appearance in the city, and yet again, he played a pounding, punishing set of hard progressive house; which tested the Fever nightclub’s sound system to its fullest extent.

He’s touring in support of the newest mix of the Global Underground series, which features a set performed replicating the vibe of one night in a city somewhere in the world. Last time, Deep Dish recorded and released a Toronto session, which was well received by both the underground and mainstream. This time, Sharam goes solo with his Dubai mix.

I spoke to him via email about what’s been going on in his life.

Nugget: How’s the tour going?

Sharam: So far so good. People have been very excited about the new CD and all the shows have been packed. It’s very exciting.

N: How was recording the Dubai Global Underground mix?

S: Challenging! I recorded it over the summer, while still touring for the last legs of our “George Is On” album tour on the hill of the 4th single “Dreams” with Stevie Nicks. But it was also fun; since I was able to put so many great records that I had been playing all summer long into a time capsule that will be immortalized forever. These compilations are sort of like a soundtrack to my life at a specific period of time; and now it gets to be the soundtrack to other people’s lives from here on out.

N: Awesome. What is it about Dubai that attracted you to this?

S: It’s an extremely open minded city and culture that is constantly growing and thriving to be the best in the middle east region if not the world. That is something refreshing and rare in that region. It’s where the ‘old’ and the ‘new’ co-exist harmoniously, so it’s exciting to be able to showcase my work via this unique society.

N: What’s new with Deep Dish?

S: We are doing solo projects at the moment. My new single PATT (Party All The Time) is out now on I-tunes and Yohop.com, and GU:Dubai is the new compilation album out in stores. I’ve also just finished a song called “Be The Change” for Anousheh Ansari, who just became the first female private space explorer.

N: Why is this Global Underground a solo disc?

S: There are two people in Deep Dish, and both of us have our own unique musical taste and production and dj-ing styles. After the last Deep Dish album it seemed like the right time to venture out a bit and try different things. We like to keep things fresh for ourselves.

N: Is Ali “Dubfire” Shirazinia going to do one as well?

S: Yes. His solo comp will be out next March and is based in Taipei.

N: What tunes have you been playing that are getting loads of love from the crowd?

S: I have put the majority of my top tunes from the past 6 months – many of which are still unreleased – in my new GU CD; so that’s the best way to find out what’s hot in my inbox right now.

N: What do you like to see in a crowd when you play?

S: I want them to have a good time.

Pussy has growl

Concert Review: Nashville Pussy with guests Priestess October 6, 2006 New City Suburbs

By ROBIN J. EGERTON

You don’t get much more rock than this. Nashville Pussy, an ‘80s hair metal / rockabilly revival band from Georgia spearheaded by husband and wife team Blaine Cartwright and Ruyter Suys (already an interesting format) that engaged the Friday night crowd of long-haired, air-punching metal-heads with their special brand of Southern-Discomfort Trailer Park Rock.

They aimed to please selling sex, sin, and Satan with a no-holds-barred low-end growl and a progressive, ever-evolving melodic charm that the band has been developing for some years now.

No doubt that their tour time with Marilyn Manson might have had some influence, however, Nashville Pussy retains a definite greasy feel that makes you want to drink beer, eat chicken, and slap asses.

Their opening act, Priestess, was arguably as good as the main draw themselves. Fresh off a frenzied U.S. tour that saw them playing 110 shows in 191 days, Priestess has a great indie appeal. They’re a young, relatively undiscovered band, with major metal influences reaching as far back as metal will go.

Yet the four long, black-haired members fire off three chord riffs and hammer out dizzying drum cadences with all the confidence and spirit of an eight-year vintage Moldavi.

These guys have not only done their homework - they’ve lived it.

It’s evident in their ability to go from dark and dirty, rolling-in-broken-glass trash-metal to sub-surface, radio-friendly garage rock.

Priestess’ style set them apart from Nashville Pussy because of their genuineness. You can tell these guys are writing music because it’s their life and soul.

Every song they played on Friday night oozed insight into their musical backgrounds - a wonderful sign these guys are on their way to developing a strong following.

If ya wanna rock out, see Nashville Pussy live. If you want to hear some great new metal from an emerging band, keep your eye out for Priestess, you’ll be seeing more of them in the future.

Sean Lennon aint his dad

Album: FRIENDLY FIRE
Artist: SEAN LENNON
Label: EMI Music Canada

By JONNY FIVE

Some might argue that Wayne Gretzky is the greatest hockey player of all time... I happen to be one of these people. Let's say that you're Wayne Gretzky's son and you want to play hockey professionally. Would you sign up to play for the Edmonton Oilers and wear number 99, all the while protesting about how much you didn't want to be compared to your dad?

This is what "Friendly Fire" the newest album from Sean Lennon feels like. As you may be aware, Sean Lennon is the son of John Lennon and Yoko Ono. John played with a little pop band in the '60s and Yoko Ono is a crazy witch.

Apparently, Sean wrote this album following a rough break-up with actress Bijou Phillips after she slept with his best friend. Oh, and his friend died in a motorcycle accident before Sean could reconcile with him.

In a scene on the DVD (a bit that Freud would have a field day with) Sean plays himself and his friend acting alongside Bijou Phillips as herself. They reenact her cheating on him in an extremely surreal short film - very odd.

At any rate, after all of this "tragedy" you would think we might be in store for some real, gripping art. Instead, we get a poor man's "Double Fantasy" crashing headlong into a failed Rufus Wainwright impersonation.

I honestly didn't want to draw any comparisons between Sean and his dad here, but he's really asking for it. He does everything he can to look and sound like John Lennon, and if he continues this way he'll always be John's weepy son to me.

Left to their own de-Vices

By TAZ DHARIWAL
Entertainment Editor

It was an early Saturday morning when my email notifier bongs me awake, and I check my inbox.

From: Social Leper
Subject: Vice Party tonight in Etown?

Hey dude, did you hear about Vice Magazine throwing a party? I need to know the info.

My head starts ringing. However, I don't know if it's because I still have a raging hangover from the previous night where I was jumping from Edmonton's hottest downtown night club, Connected Fridays at The Bank, to for some Godforsaken reason, Cowboy's. The last thing I can remember is watching the desperate getting hammered at Cowboy's. I realized that the appeal of bars like Cowboy's and Ezzie's is that when they have a Friday night that isn't a typical Friday night there will still be a number of desperate men and women looking to get totally laid by a drunken stranger. Depending on how the sex actually goes you may or may not be charged with some form of sexual battery.

There was one girl patrolling the dance floor, who looked as if some company had a "bring your daughter to work" day; and the sleazy, greasy cradle-robbing CEO dressed up his 17 year old girlfriend in an outfit purchased on of-ficesluts.com, as she took dictation while sitting on his lap. She was all over this one young lad who looked like he fell ass backwards out of his Myspace profile. He was making the moves, and it seemed that he would live out his father's dream of doing his administrative assistant. He was close, because I think I saw her hike up her skirt, when out of nowhere, the bane of everyone who goes to these bars to get fucked appears. Yes, the group of friends who come to steal their friend away, and this is why it's good to be a girl.

Only girls will do this for their girlfriends. Dudes, if you ever tried to do this to your drunken buddy who's grinding with some hambeast you won't save him. You'll let him enjoy his drunken bliss until he wakes up the next morning; and in a sober hung-over daze he screams until he can get free. On his way home he'll check his cell phone; and see a bunch of pictures his buddies sent of him making out with that horrid beast.

After recollecting my thoughts from the previous night, I decided to hunt down where exactly this Vice Magazine party was going to be. I call up my connections; and eventually I'm led to Gravity Pope, where they inform me that all I have to do is sign up on the guest list on the Vice website.

Eventually I'm led to the secret party place, which was Gravity Pope's warehouse behind their store. I walk into what looks like a scener's paradise. If the worlds of fashion, music, cocaine, and being a wanker could collide in the heart of an oil city in the middle of Northern Alberta, the Vice Magazine party would be the result from the chaos.

Free Coors Light was given out to everyone, which honestly, was the only reason I went in the first place. DJs played hip tunes; and The Sub-Atomics played a 50 minute set, which was louder than fuck. It was when The Sub-Atomics played that I decided to spend some time outside the venue. It was here that I was exposed to someone who was inevitably dubbed "Low Rent Duffman."

Here was a guy who walked around getting people to drink while blaring into a cheap megaphone and wearing sunglasses at night. He looked like a wanker. I grabbed a lanyard and attached a sign that read "Low Rent Duffman," that's what he was. He looked like a hipster Duffman; and at first, when we wanted to take his picture, he and the chick he was with were glad to pose. It wasn't until he read the sign that he went, "Aw, fuck!" and ripped it off. He was pouting in the back of his SUV for the remainder of the night.

Overall, going to the 100/100 Vice party was kind of like reading an issue of Vice. You're totally jazzed about it when you get it; but a couple of hours later you're done with it and toss it away. Also, I saw a guy get a $230 ticket for taking a piss in the alleyway, so that was cool.

Freak flag flies

Artist: K-Os
Album: Hymns for Disco
Label: Virgin

By TAZ DHARIWAL

K-Os is holding it down for Canadian hip-hop, no doubt. He's bringing conscious hip-hop to the forefront in Canada, which is great to see. I'm not hating on other rappers doing what they do. However, when it comes to shifting units, and making a mark on the charts K-Os is doing what a lot of rappers are afraid or unable to do. He's letting his artistic freak flag fly, which a lot of rappers aren't doing. Granted, they might not have been raised in a home like K-Os was, but with this, his third album in four years, he's taking hip-hop to new levels. He now has the freedom to do a lot more experimenting while keeping his roots deep in classic hip-hop. The first track, Elektrik Heat, firmly cements K-Os in hip-hop, utilizing the classic amen breakbeat and his patented conscious flow. He then flips the script, and gives us some heartbreaking beats on a jazz tip on The Rain. His current single, Sunday Morning, sounds like something out of a Broken Social Scene out take. It's amazing to see someone break the monotony that keeps a lot of hip-hop artists in social bondage. Listening to a disc that doesn't knock women down to the role of being a sticky hole that's money-hungry is refreshing in hip-hop nowadays. Check out Atlantis: Hymns for Disco if you want a break from the Black eyed Peas and their ilk.

Accessible to everyone

Album: The Crane Wife
Artist: The Decemberists

By: BRENT CONSTANTIN

For long-time elitist fans The Crane Wife offers fresh fuel to the fire of artists "selling out," while on the other hand, it's also a great jumping on point for most of you who might have been frightened away by some of the band's previous efforts. The Decemberists first release, after their move from indie label Kill Rock Stars to "evil-giant" Capitol Records, streamlines their trademark rolling sea chanteys and haunting tales of star-crossed suicide into a polished package that's accessible to everyone.

The Crane Wife follows the typical format of the Decemberists, a band that's know for their use of history and period-fiction to sing stories, not songs, of introspection. This album borrows from the Japanese story of the same name where a poor man finds a crane with an arrow in its wing on his doorstep. He heals the bird and it flies away, while that night a beautiful woman appears with whom he falls in love. In order to make a living the woman agrees to spin clothes that her husband can sell in town under the condition that he never watches her as she does it. The man agrees, and soon his greed overcomes him as he makes his wife make more and more clothing – oblivious to the fact that her health is failing. Finally, his curiosity overcomes him and he spies on her. She is actually the crane that he healed, plucking her own feathers to spin into the clothes. The woman sees her husband and flies away forever. So, if you're the kind of person that read the above paragraph and said, "Hey, that would make a kick-ass song!" then this CD is for you. You also may have some sort of unhealthy obsession with birds. Lead singer/songwriter Colin Meloy plays Capitol quite well. Taking what they have to offer, yet not giving a thing up. I'm hard pressed to find a single that's radio friendly. The closest I can see are Yankee Bayonet and Sons and Daughters, and even these are a little too drawn out and dreamy to make it to most stations. Most of the changes can be heard instrumentally, with the band ditching some of their acoustic style in favour of new-fangled electric guitars, keyboards and effects. I also noticed a lack of some of the majesty Picardesque, their previous album, was filled with. As well, there are fewer songs about pirates then usual, but that's not really a complaint – I just like songs about pirates. All in all The Crane Wife scratches my itch for songs filled with murder, thievery, and rotten-dirty-soundrels. It's another solid album from The Decemberists, major label or not.

Ooks goalie a standout

By JASON JONES

The Thanksgiving Weekend allowed most teams some time off. The men’s and women’s soccer teams are now more than half-way through their season, so look for mid-season reports in next week’s Nugget. The men have dominated at times and stand at 4 and 1, second in the North division behind MacEwan (as of Tuesday Oct. 10). The women are fourth in the North, 3 points back of the Kings with a 1-3-2 record.

The men’s hockey team did play, starting their season off with a win and a loss against MacEwan. On Friday in St. Albert, the team got things started off with a 5-3 win; but on Saturday at NAIT they lost 5-3. That game was disappointing for them because they held the lead but couldn’t finish.

Rookie Kevin Dziaduck played well in goal, making 28 saves in the win and a whopping 45 in the loss. Rookie forward Cedrick Duhamel potted 2 goals on Friday, while captain Ben Stokes added 2 goals and a helper on the weekend.

Elsewhere in ACAC hockey, both SAIT and Concordia won both their games to start on top at 2 and 0.

Best Bets

Basketball
Ooks basketball kicks off this weekend. Both teams play Friday at Concordia – the women at 6:30 and the men right after.

Mens Hockey
Men’s hockey continues with a home game against Concordia on Saturday at 2:00. You can hear the game live on NR92.com.

Womens Hockey
And women’s hockey gets going on Thursday in Red Deer, with the home opener on Friday at NAIT at 7:00.

Ooks and Griffins fans take a break for some half time fun during Thursday’s match

Jason sour on Cherry

By JASON JONES

NHL
The Oilers started their season with a home and home split against Calgary. It’s always a different game against the Flames, so the big test is Thursday against the Sharks. I like what I’ve seen so far, especially from the Sykora-Torres-Hemsky line and Daniel Tjarnqvist. Hemsky looks like a top 20 NHL forward (he may get 90 points) and Tjarnqvist logged 25 minutes each night and has some offensive upside.

My concern is that with all the forward talent it’s tough to get them all the ice time they need to be effective. MacTavish will have to be creative to get everyone going. Plus, we’ve yet to see Alexei Mikhnov, who may be something special. Down in the minors Toby Petersen has 3 points in 2 games while Robbie Shremp has 2 goals.

Most surprising team so far - it couldn’t be Atlanta, Columbus, or Minnesota. We knew they’d be better. How about Toronto? They have a solid young team and may benefit by not being able to make mistakes spending money. And if you’re looking for forwards in your hockey pool pick up Kyle Wellwood, Alexander Semin, and Martin Havlat. How ‘bout them Blackhawks? They can score, but will Khabibulin keep allowing 6 goals a game?

Stop watching Don Cherry and Coach’s corner in protest of how bad it is. He spent 5 minutes telling everyone he was right about Kyle Wellwood and offered nothing new. When you’re a loud mouth who doesn’t stop talking you’re bound to say something decent at least once a year. But spare your audience from your ego trip and stop resting on your laurels. Kelly Hrudehy has passed you by; and, Cherry, you need to accept that.

CFL
Believe it or not, the Eskimos still have a shot at the playoffs. It may come down to the final game against Saskatchewan.

NFL
In the NFL Only Chicago and Indianapolis are still unbeaten, with talk that the Bears could go 16-0. I give that about a 20% chance, but they’re definitely the best team in the NFL. Indy is not as good as their record indicates. Oakland, however, is as bad as their record.

MLB
I was 0 for 4 in predicting the ALDS and NLDS series. So, if I were a betting man I’d go against my instincts. Bet on Oakland and St. Louis with the A’s winning the world series.

Best Bets
Oilers and Avalanche on Saturday night with Kelly Hrudehy. Thank God.

Who knew that the Philly-New Orleans game in Week 6 would be the game of the week?

Check out the record breaking Tristan Jones and the Edmonton Wildcats as junior football playoffs begin this weekend. The Wildcats host the Regina Thunder at Clarke Park on Sunday at 1:00. The Edmonton Huskies too made the playoffs, in spite of themselves, and will be in Saskatoon on Sunday to play the Hilltops.

Athletes of the week

LINDSAY SMITH
WOMEN’S SOCCER

Lady OOK
As the last line of defence, second year sweeper Lindsay Smith has been a tower of power for our Women’s Soccer team, combining with goalie Lindsey Letendre to limit the opposition to a meagre seven goals in five league games. Calmly directing the defence from the back Lindsay stabilizes the team; and her goal off a free kick early in the season salvaged a tie for the team against TKUC. NAIT supporters can look for Lindsay to play a critical role as challenge for a playoff spot this year.

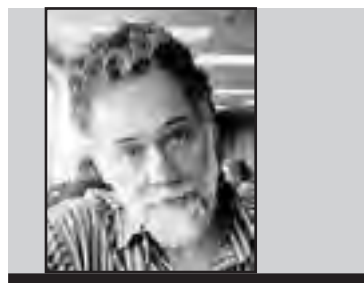

KEVIN DZIADUCK
MEN’S HOCKEY

OOK
Rookie Ooks goalie, Kevin Dziaduck, was outstanding this weekend helping NAIT split their weekend series with the Griffins. Friday night he stopped 28 of 31 shots as the Ooks spoiled MacEwan’s home-opener at their new St. Albert rink. On Saturday Kevin was peppered with 49 shots, and kept the Ooks within striking distance until an empty net goal sealed a 5-3 win for the Griffins. Kevin hails from Buchanan, Saskatchewan and comes to the Ooks from the Yorkton Terriers of the SJHL.

Astral Reflections

By TIM STEPHENS

OCTOBER 15 – 21, 2006

Aries March 21-April 19

This is your last week of crucial relationships, new horizons, new opportunities, public dealings and negotiations. It continues to be a time of key co-operation or challenge – just remember, others hold the ace, the power. Tackle investment, finance, sexual, intimate, health diagnostic, research and investigative matters this week, because October 28 starts three weeks of delay, mistakes and misinformation in these areas. A powerful bonus could come to you Sunday, in friendship, love, perhaps a sexual or financial “breakthrough.” Monday/Tuesday into November begins an intense, puzzling sexual attraction.

Taurus April 20-May 20

This is your last week of work and health concerns for a while, Taurus. Soon, relationships and new horizons will absorb your interest. But tackle those chores now: this week continues the hectic pace, the large demands on your time, especially if you’re involved with a large corporation, drug, health, government, institution or charity organization. Complete paperwork and red tape. You might feel an urge to make a contact or tie up an agreement, but patience serves you – there will be many “switch-backs” before this road ends, in December.

Gemini May 21-June 20

One last week of romance, beauty, child-related joys, creative surges and pleasure urges faces you – make the most of it, especially Thursday noon through Saturday. These few days, a significant romance might begin; but it might also end quickly, depending on your birth chart. Overall, it’s better to wait until December (into 2007) to meet a viable new mate. Love begun now would contain deep romantic, sexual elements, but a difficult marital pathway. Travel, read, talk Sunday/Monday, but believe nothing Sunday. Rest, be domestic, study property trends

Tuesday/Wednesday. Then, love!

Cancer June 21-July 22

Although you’re busily engaged at home (or you’re ensconced in a recuperation vacation) you’ll hear from or contact a romantic person, or you’ll begin to tinker with a creative, speculative or child-benefiting idea. Be patient with this, as there are likely to be many twists and turns – and delays – until you reach a satisfying destination. A romance or creative project that arises next week (October 23 to 28) will have deeper intensities! You might start a good domestic or security project Thursday noon into Saturday – best if it’s short, small.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

What you learn is still not profitable, but it might plant future seeds – so keep searching, learning, asking questions. (Especially on legal, philosophical, advertising, and cultural themes, and about foreign countries.) Rumors and news affecting your home, family, retirement or security interests has been untrue, but the “accurate news” begins to arrive Wednesday onward (into early December – though deception or misinformation will recur, around November 7 and 28). If you have to buy anything home related (furniture?) do it Wednesday/Thursday – after this, lemons abound. Your charisma soars Sunday/Monday – expect attention!

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

You’ve been tempted – and still are – to purchase an investment. I wouldn’t. Wait, save your funds for the end of November, and December into 2007. The disappointing news you might have heard (or hear this Sunday) in the love area is actually good news – it takes you away from someone who isn’t stable. You need to rebuild your life, your “home base,” before Big Love comes – and it will, in 2008! Complete chores, reports, essays, communications and any necessary travel now – slowdowns and confusion loom. Your charisma soars mid-week!

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

Your charisma, energy and effectiveness continue to soar! Make this time count, especially in love and personal negotiations. Money influences are not the best before November 24. Also, deception or possible self-delusion has affected recent money matters. Those illusions dissipate Monday onward, so use this week to complete money and spending tasks before confusion, delays, and “lemons” arrive (October 28 to November 17). Happiness, social joys fill Sunday/Monday. Rest mid-week. That ultra-sexy/romantic magnetism you’ve been radiating ends October 23, so enjoy it, indulge it – especially Thursday noon to Saturday.

Scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21

Lie low, rest, and pamper your health. Contact government agencies, head office, and institutions – handle red tape, but avoid submitting new applications before November 18, as slowdowns and mix-ups prevail until then. Beware fuzzy thinking Sunday; wait until Monday to chase ambitions, or to contact a boss or VIP. Your hopes rise on a breeze of the heart Tuesday to Thursday noon. Enjoy, but remain “hidden” – avoid commitments. Sink into deep rest Thursday through Saturday. You’ll be glad you did when next week starts a powerful romantic, energetic phase!

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Social delights, hopes, optimism, popularity, light romance and entertainment fill your days! (Especially Sunday/Monday, and Thursday noon to Saturday, when life is good! But buckle down to career duties, parental demands or status restrictions mid-week.) False news or rumors have circulated about relationships, business opportunities or links or career prospects – accuracy returns after Sunday. But these matters are beginning to slow, to turn confusing through November 17. Don’t start new projects. Use this week to complete, to tie up loose ends, especially in private, red tape or “hidden” areas.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

The emphasis continues on your reputation, ambitions, status and career progress. A new career project might start late this week (Thursday to Saturday) but it might also be over as soon as it begins: it could be a “false start” that 1) isn’t harmful, and 2) teaches you something. You might have been romantically focusing on a higher-up or “power person” for the last few weeks. But next week could bring a real – and romantic – friend. Illusions abound Sunday, but research yields deep, valuable answers Monday.

day. Understanding arrives Tuesday/Wednesday.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

A beneficial emphasis remains on love, cultural events, law, higher learning, foreign travel and similar interests. You might start a new project in one of these zones Thursday to Saturday, but it’s a toss-up whether it will “take hold” or find traction. It’s a little late, and conditions are changing very quickly. You’ve already begun hearing news of career, business or prestige situations or plans – alas, to date these have been wrong. But the true news might arrive this week (AFTER Sunday’s illusions). Seek answers mid-week: you’ll feel sexy!

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

You’ve heard false news, or gathered a false impression, in legal, far travel, cultural, love, higher education or philosophical zones. This fuzzy state continues Sunday, then dissipates. So spend the rest of this week investigating, searching out the truth. What you see or dig up Thursday noon to Saturday could be fresh, new as a baby, clean, and hope inspiring! Don’t do anything with this: just remark it. By December onward, your life will change, perhaps from Friday/Saturday’s insight. Work Sunday/Monday. Exciting meetings bring attractive but unstable potentials Tuesday/Wednesday.

To all the people on the 3rd floor of the HP Center: Every time I walk into the bathrooms here there's piss all over the floor in front of the urinals. This is adult education, by now you should have had enough target practice to aim properly. Please piss into the urinals. If you're too fat to see your dick and therefore can't aim properly, or if you are just too stupid to do it right please castrate yourself.

So one day these two ninjas are totally driving a car when planes crash into the car beside theirs. The passenger ninja says, "Owned," and the driver ninja says, "Pilot noob at plane." They become aroused by the sight of death and throw ninja stars at each other. They both die! A guy walking by sees the dead ninjas, and hot babes come and do him. The moral of the story is living guys get more action than dead guys do!

To the big guy with the beard in my first year geology class: I think you're really cute, but I'm too shy to talk to talk to you. If you're interested reply to the Nugget.

XOXOXO

Nugget boy, nobody cares about your stupid, little problems like digital clocks. Maybe you should worry more about getting laid.

To the retards over at the business tower: have fun managing MacDonald's!

To all the business kids: I was wondering, what do they teach you that you all think that you're going to be big hotshots because you took a few years at NAIT? The only way to become the head of a corporation, or get quarter million dollar salaries is to either inherit the company, or give wicked head. If you aren't eligible for the first, the latter had better be your forte. So smile like a doughnut; and you'll get your money and all your aspirations won't just be fabrications.

Who else loves the security around here? Walking around with the lock cutters on their shoulders, wearing bright neon green winter jackets...inside. Noses in the air even though the only thing they do is cut off locks when stupid business people lock their keys inside, or ditzes too stupid to remember three numbers can't get their locks off. Oh yeah, and give parking tickets. Because students as a general rule, don't actually need to eat or pay rent. They pay tuition, books, and have a savings account just meant for tickets in case the meter runs out; and they can't make it back within the three minutes response time security has. Keep up the good job boys.

Hello Everyone:
There are a few issues that need to be brought up. First and foremost, Erin (the hot single from last week) I think you are smokin' hot. I am taken, but I have a friend who is very interested and they would treat you right.

To the Nugget Boy...you are a bozo. What kind of guy writes to the Nugget about skin being left on their chicken? Maybe you can bring your mommy to school to cut your meat for you. Even better have her pack you a lunch stupid. You are an idiot. Grow up, and find your balls if you can. If you ask me you couldn't get laid at a morgue. Are you that guy with the negative penis size?

Smoky Joe...You must weigh 500 lbs. You can't find the energy to dispose of your cigarette butts. What is wrong with your Fat Ass? Don't be so fucking lazy, prick. Keep the school and environment clean stupid...da da da I can't find the ash tray da da...dum.

To the tall guy with the black leather instrumentation hat and red jacket: I am in your instrumentation class, and I think that you are hot! You churn my butter and make my blood boil with a passion lost through the ages. I want you. You've awakened something inside me and that's what makes me want YOU inside me. I want to lather you in cottage cheese and eat it all off. Please respond to this. You won't regret it. I'll be waiting. XOXOXOXOX Sincerely yours,

- K.C.
PS I'm horny

Nugget Boy: What is your issue? Why are you always complaining about everything? Why don't you try a different approach to life... enjoying it. Stop bitching about everything. If you don't like NAIT then leave. It's as simple as that.

I was at the HP center working on my homework. I finished it and went to print, but both printers were having "service upgrades" done to them. Luckily I don't need the report right away, because I would be screwed if I did. I understand that computers need to have maintenance and such done, but you figure that when it came to the two printers that they could do one at a time so that we could still print if need be.

Want to know why no one ever writes into the Grapevines? Because the idiot who edits them never bothers to put the e-mail address anywhere for people to see. Douche.

Listen Up! If you're too cheap to pay 75 cents a game for foosball; and you just stuff the goals full of old Nuggets do everyone a favour and pull them all out once you're done. Otherwise other folks come in and get 4 balls for their games. Curse you!
