

THE FUGGET

THE NAIT NUGGET SATIRE ISSUE

SEPTEMBER 13, 2018

Disclaimer

The Fugget is a satire newspaper that does not in any way represent the ideas and beliefs of NAITSA or NAIT. Satire is defined as “the use of humour, irony, exaggeration, or ridicule to expose and criticize people’s stupidity or vices, particularly in the context of contemporary politics and other topical issues.”

In proper satire, the goal is to poke fun at things that individuals or groups have chosen, not things they have been born into or have (examples include: race, disability, sexual orientation and disease.)

Popular satire outlets include The Beaverton, The Onion, Saturday Night Live, National Lampoon, Funny or Die, This Hour Has 22 Minutes and many more. Our staff is interested in this genre of writing and The Fugget provides a supportive learning environment to practise these skills, at a college that creates practical educational experiences.

Our team holds the belief that freedom of speech is a right, and we are lucky to live in a country that respects that. The following articles are intended to provoke thought and discussion on modern social and political issues, and/or make you laugh. This issue contains mature themes and content. Enjoy crossing the line into the grey area.

Free(ish) speech at NAIT

By JORY PROFT

The last time we published an issue of The Fugget, the papers flew off the newsstands ... as they were carried away by infuriated NAIT staff.

Staff Controlling All Reading and Educational Decisions, or S.C.A.R.E.D., was a group formed with the intent of curating which literature is acceptable for NAIT students to be exposed to.

“The decision to pull the papers from newsstands was made to protect our students. How are grown adults supposed to know what’s appropriate and funny if we don’t tell them,” said chancellor of the group, Ivanna Censor.

To ensure that a satire issue of a student newspaper looking to have some fun and make some jokes was “kept in line,” S.C.A.R.E.D. took further precautionary measures in addition to removing the issues from the stands.

The regime’s first act was to hold a bonfire to promote community at NAIT ... and to burn all traces of The Fugget.

“We don’t ever want to repeat history by letting writers do something that may offend and exclude others ... so we held the first-ever peaceful book burning,” said Censor.

The chancellor’s self-proclaimed “greatest” S.C.A.R.E.D. achievement was when she started a secret policing organization to seek out all satire-sympathizers and blacklist them from all NAIT events. The Satire Stoppers, or the SS for short, were tasked with infiltrating any groups who wrote or read satire. Even those who didn’t outright oppose The Fugget’s satire were given the same poor treatment as supporters.

“If you’re not with us you’re against us, and if the government isn’t going to regulate who should get to use their freedom of assembly and speech, it’s up to us S.C.A.R.E.D. people to decide it for NAIT,” said Censor.

The resistance has been building for years and the Fugget United Comedy and Knowledge Undertaking, or F.U.C.K.U has just released another Fugget.

NEW NAIT Trial Programs: Check out these new programs exclusive to NAIT this academic school year. As a leading polytechnic college we are always looking for ways to expand in the industry, giving our students the opportunity to achieve and have meaningful practical careers.

Goat Caregiving Have you ever wondered how the Billy Goats Gruff were able to cross the troll’s bridge? Well NAIT’s new six-month Goat Caregiving program will teach you that, and much more! Students will be trained in milking, sheering, and herding goats. Applicants must learn and perform the “Lonely Goatherd” marionette number from The Sound of Music and perform it to the program chair in its entirety. After naming your furry friend and developing a bond with it, your final exam will require you to learn psychic powers that would allow you to stare at the goat until it dies – and then you’ll get to butcher and eat them! Program Costs: 6000 Romanian lei + The Troll’s Bridge Toll Program Chair: President Naomi Pela	Pharmaceutical Sequestered Techniques and Chemical Enhancement This Pharmaceutical program focuses on different techniques for creating new, or enhancing pharmaceuticals. You will take classes that teach you how to sell products your customers will soon not be able to say no to. As well, it will give you the street smarts to spot potential clients on public streets, or playgrounds. If being a pharmacist seems like too much work, this could be the opportunity for you to meet lots of people but still feel isolated and alone. Program Costs (24 courses): $80/ G or you can buy an “8-Ball Pack” for $200, which pays for a package of Gs. Program Chair: Ben Johnson	Parenting in Sports 101 Parenting in Sports 101 will focus on many skills and techniques to help you become the best, most obnoxious, game-changing parent you can be. This first-of-its-kind program will teach you how to properly take control of refs, umps, other parents and innocent children via manipulative bullying techniques. All with the “good hearted” intent to help your child make the big league. Do you feel your kid is better than the rest without any real proof, and didn’t live out your dreams and aspirations as an athlete? This is the course for you! Program Costs: 15 per cent of your child’s pro contract Program Chair: Your Dad	Human & Game Taxidermy This 13-week program is the fastest way to start gutting and stuffing whatever, or whom-ever you want. Organs and blood may leave a mess, but to learn how to stuff and mount a corpse is an art. Not only will you acquire techniques to sew flesh and hides with fluidity, but you will also learn how to position these lifeless bodies. Our new Human Taxidermy module will allow you to take a corpse from rigor mortis to you’ll-want-to-bone-this. Program Costs: $2,500 Tuition covers everything you need for this 13-week program. You will mount: 4 game-fish, 2 upland birds, 2 waterfowls, 1 white tail game head, 1 medium-to-large life size mammal, (ex. cougar, bear) and 1 medium-to-large full-scale human carcass. Program Chair: M.T. Witchell

Where IS the mayor's birth certificate?!

By JORY PROFT

Born in St. Albert on May 30, 1979, our mayor is NOT a natural-born Edmontonian and therefore unfit to run our city!

How could someone born nearly 20 whole kilometres from city hall possibly understand the needs of a community they have only lived in for over 75 per cent of their life?

'Birther theorists' have gotten a bad name ever since Donald Trump questioned the legitimacy of Barack Obama's birth certificate, and I'm sick of having my beliefs dismissed after Obama's Hawaiian-birth was proven real.

So, I'm here to demonstrate to the uneducated, ignorant people, the dangers of having a mayor born outside the City of Champions.

Argument One – Iveson's Ties to the LIBERAL Media:

'His Worship' Don Iveson has long been involved with Canada's liberal media – a group known for its scheming, deceptive ways!

Not only did he act as managing editor for the University of Alberta's student paper, The Gateway, but he also left our great city for the centre of Canada's universe – Toronto!

In Toronto, he served as the president of the Canadian University Press; a role that allowed him to control and indoctrinate nearly every reader and writer within Canadian universities with the St. Albert belief system.

Argument Two – Iveson's LOVE for Spy and Espionage Novels:

Donny-boy is well-known for his appreciation of the Horatio Hornblower book series. I was able to decipher the messages found in these political-espionage rags and drew similarities between the main character and Iveson himself.

The most recognizable similarity between Horatio Hornblower and Iveson can be found in their shared tone-deafness. Although I do support their views, everyone knows St. Albert does not allow music, dancing, or fun, due to its strict-Conservative roots. Not growing up with exposure to music, Iveson never developed an ear for it. In an effort to combat this and appear to be a natural-born Edmontonian, the mayor married a music teacher in hopes of understanding tone. His tone-deafness is also believed to be a reason for why acts such as Trooper, k.d. lang, and Brett Kissel are so frequently allowed to play in Edmonton.

Argument Three – Iveson's UNDENIABLE favoritism towards St. Albert:

It is clear that Edmonton's mayor has a soft spot for his birthplace.

If you look at these unedited documents, you can see Iveson's selfish plans to expand the LRT directly to his childhood home in St. Albert.

An avid sailor, there's speculation that Iveson may have even illegally immigrated to Edmonton by way of the North Saskatchewan River. Why does a man order the construction of a funicular that JUST goes down to Edmonton's river valley if not for easier access for other non-natural-born Edmontonians to reap the benefits of our great city? Is he smuggling in other St. Albertans (St. Albert-ites?) into the city?

IN CONCLUSION:

Born DonALD L. Iveson, why does he go by the name "Don" WHAT is he hiding? What does that "L." stand for, LIAR?

If Edmonton's mayor is willing to lie about something as simple as his name, what else is he willing to try to sneak past Edmontonians?

"Strong" trademarked for all tragedies

By JORY PROFT

A merchandising company has now copyrighted all use of the word "strong" in response to the trend of the word becoming included in "post-tragedy branding."

TRAGEDIES R' US has filed a "ordinary-mark" trademark that gives them exclusive rights of "strong" when used in any goods related to major tragedies.

"I recognized that after anything bad would happen, clothing, bumper stickers, accessories, things like that, would be made with a city's name with the word strong after it ... and every time I would see all these things on TV, I would see dollar signs," said the owner of TRAGEDIES R' US.

The company has faced significant backlash from groups looking to use the word for fundraising purposes for survivors and their families affected by these events. Many have called it "disaster capitalism," a term describing a situation in which an individual or organization profits off the suffering of others.

In response to these claims, the owner of the company had this to say: "Please ... TV is making money off people's suffering all the time, and drug companies, boy they make bank on disease, and how much profit do you think wars makes for the man!? I am just an average guy trying to support his family," said the company owner.

Although other groups can no longer use the term "strong" in their branding, the company says it's not opposed to its use for charitable awareness. TRAGEDIES R' US has stated that they are willing to donate merchandise to those affected by future tragedies (if they have a large social media following and are willing to frequently post photos of themselves with the gear).

"It's all about giving back to the community," said the owner.

Merchandise has already been created with every major city's name followed by "strong" in the unfortunate (well, fortunate for the company) event that tragedy strikes.

"You can't plan these things; you always have to be ready," said the eager owner.

Oil & Gas Workers Train AI

By MICHAEL MENZIES

In the growing world of Artificial Intelligence, one industry that is blossoming with investment is the oil and gas sector.

Alberta's oil and gas workers are known for their hard-working, can-do spirit.

But, these "intangible" characteristics are proving to be difficult for many of these tech companies to replicate. According to a high-ranking source within a leading oil field company, the operating systems do not experience difficulty with routine workplace tasks, but currently "lack the spirit and pugnacity" needed to fit into these working environments.

To combat this problem, a team of seasoned, non-IT, oil field workers have been tasked with getting these AI systems up to speed in the hustle-and-bustle of a drill-site.

They are called T.A.I.N.T: "Training Artificial Intelligence with Nasty Tendencies."

"One of the things we're teaching them is how to swear," said the oldest and wisest in T.A.I.N.T.

He recommends that the quickest way to improve in that department is to add the word "shit" or "piss" to any noun.

"For example, if the AI system is responding to a question, or imputing data, we're training it to respond to those commands with these words thrown into it," he said.

"Within the day, it was responding to commands with 'the shit rig is 40 km and a piss away.' Even if you just combine them, that's a word you can call almost anything. 'Hand me the shitpiss, shitpiss'," he proclaimed.

"Since these systems have the capacity to integrate into our vehicles, it's just a matter of teaching them how to brap their pipes, and do a buck-60 on the highway. The bots have even come to us asking if they can install lift-kits in the company trucks," said AI Berta of T.A.I.N.T.

T.A.I.N.T says that within only a couple weeks, they started to notice signs that their knowledge was rubbing off.

"I showed up to work the other day, and there was a 'Fuck the NDP' bumper sticker on my desk. I know it was one of those systems that put it there. I felt proud at what we have accomplished in such a short time," said Cole Roller of T.A.I.N.T.

The AI was initially programmed to collect trash and compact it into "waste cubes." T.A.I.N.T has reprogrammed the bots to only pick up "liberal garbage," such as The CBC, T4-slips, and PPE.

Other noticeable improvements include slanderous talk about the activity of some oil field workers' wives and mothers, the efficiencies found in laying down lines of cocaine, and subtle jabs at people in other racial groups.

"Overall, it's showing benefits across the board. I think if other companies don't create their own T.A.I.N.T, they're going to be in trouble," said the leader of T.A.I.N.T.

With growing investment and these human factors slowly becoming the norm, it won't be long before AI is as integral to the oil and gas sector as the 'Berta boys of decades ago.

NAIT execs have own Nest Fest

By JORY PROFT

As Nest Fest returned to NAIT for the third-straight year this past week, the free event saw a money tunnel, live entertainment, and cheap drinks. But, what most people don't know is that the higher-ups at NAIT have been holding their own, invitation-only, back-to-school event long before Nest Fest was even conceptualized.

To open NAIT's new PIC building, The Dionysus Days were held there, with Prime Minister Trudeau even attending the opening ceremonies on Wednesday, where he drank the blood of Edmonton's newest-born child. (Or so we heard, because The Nugget, NAIT's primary news source, was not invited).

The Dionysus Days are celebrated by NAIT and industry's elite members during the first week of classes every year. The name is derived from Dionysus, the Greek god of wine, fertility, ritual madness, religious ecstasy, and theatre – all the fun stuff wealthy people get to engage in while the rest of us are too busy being poor and sad. Students and commoner scum are only allowed if they were brought to compete in the "Dinner for Peasants" – a traditional competition in which the wealthy, important guests attempt to invite the least intelligent, attractive, and desirable person they can find (still not sure why I was invited, but I did win Dinner for Peasants). The Peasants are mocked throughout the night and the winner (or loser, depending how you look at it) is put in a cage in a NAIT higher-up's office to be kept as a human pet.

The exclusive event saw a variety of debauchery to keep these prestigious guests entertained.

A money tunnel similar to Nest Fest's entitled The Cash Grab, was held in the NAIT bookstore, the cash prizing being taken out of the nearly $2 million the polytechnic made off of textbooks and supplies that week.

The crowd was filled with excessive drinking, orgies, and alumni fanning NAIT leaders with Techlife Today magazines.

A traditional game closed-off the night's excitement. The Seven Deadly Sins, a friendly competition is played to see who can engage in as many vices as possible by the end of the night; the winner receiving the honour of having a NAIT building named after them. Despite's Trudeau's known history of over-indulgence, he was only able to fulfill two of: pride, greed, lust, envy, gluttony, wrath and sloth – you can guess which ones he performed.

"I guess Mr. Trudeau is not as evil and cunning as the elite of NAIT and Alberta's industry ... his dad had a lot better numbers when he attended many years ago," said a party-goer.

Lacrosse team bitten

Reptile experts are concerned that the National Lacrosse League's newest expansion team is not representing crocodiles accurately.

The Florida Crocodiles revealed the team's official jersey Saturday night. The emblem depicts an angry crocodile with a man's arm in its mouth.

"It is very rare for crocodilians to attack without being provoked, of course it does happen ... but to make such a blanketing visual statement as the jerseys did, is completely unfair to these beautiful beings," said Dr. Saint-Marie of the Herpetology Institute.

A petition has been created requesting a rebranding of the logo to better represent the corresponding mascot. With over 100,000 signatures in the last 24 hours, this movement continues to grow in popularity.

The first game of the Crocodiles' inaugural season will be against the Columbus Mosquitoes, who have been roped into the controversy due to their branding being portrayed as a particularly peaceful one. One argument has brought up scientific evidence which proves that every year more people are bitten and killed by mosquitoes than crocodiles. Around 700,000 people are killed annually by mosquitoes, compared to only 1,000 by crocodiles.

"Mosquitoes have a long history of colonizing places they are unwanted," said entomologist, Dr. Longboat. "Other qualities of mosquitoes include spilling the blood of others, bringing a gift of disease, and killing species indigenous to the area, to the point of near-extinction."

Although many agree that the misrepresentation needs to be looked at, some believe that it is a waste of time and resources.

"Having to order and create new jerseys and merch for a couple people to feel better is stupid! Plus the Mosquitoes are gonna kill the Crocs anyways. GO MOSQUITOES!, Whoo," said John Cabot, a Mosquitoes supporter.

The controversy between these teams is not only in the emblems on their uniforms.

Although they are very new to the league, the Crocodiles have already been fleeced in several trades with the Mosquitoes.

"The Mosquitoes have a long history of being greedy and deceptive with trades," said a TSN analyst. "It's unfair, the Mosquitoes already have more than enough resources to thrive – this is a really bad way to start a relationship with a fellow team."

Lacrosse has a storied, and proud history in Florida and a pro team has long been awaited. Much of Florida is not in favour of the poor depiction of crocodiles in their logo, but they do believe a stronger, more accurate representation of their state-animal would be acceptable. Regardless, with the jersey controversy and the greed of the Mosquitoes, it may be difficult to preserve the traditions of the small-market Florida lacrosse community.

"It's going to be tough for the Crocs to keep the traditions of Florida lacrosse alive if major-market teams like the Mosquitoes keep trying to impose their city's culture on these smaller markets and force them to assimilate within the league," said the TSN analyst.

The league is currently looking into both of the team's emblems and if the history behind them makes them appropriate to be used as a logo.

The entire sports world will be watching to see if the teams will be able to reconcile their differences on their first matchup on Thanksgiving weekend.

Ooks accused of doping

By JORY PROFT

Several Ooks are under investigation after Athletics discovered a locker full of performance-enhancing drugs in a locker room.

The main suspects in the case are various international players, and an athlete recovering from testicular cancer.

"In any case of sports doping the world has seen, it's always been foreign players and guys with ball cancer," said an Athletics representative. "If we can't use stereotypes to make blanketing accusations, what else do we have?"

Although charges have not yet been made, the league is already looking into suitable punishments for the alleged offenders.

"We're really looking into how the International Olympic Committee has dealt with doping in the past," said a league representative.

The first option the league has looked into is carving stone sculptures into the athlete's likeness and placing them outside the gym – forever marking them as cheaters. As illegal use of performance enhancers have been around since the inception of the Olympics, this method was inspired by the Ancient Greeks' use of a similar punishment.

The other proposed punishment was inspired by the Russians' treatment in the 2018 Winter Olympics. If the players were convicted, they would have to compete under the name "Athlete of NAIT," instead of under the Ooks branding. Any awards or championships won by the alleged dopers would not count towards the Ooks' record within the league.

The PEDs were found in the locker of basketball player, Jim Rat. Questions have been asked as to why the drugs were in Rat's locker, but the Canadian-born athlete has yet to be considered a person of interest in the case.

"There's no way it could be him ... the accusations are really getting to Jim ... he's starting to experience male-pattern baldness, his acne is breaking out, and his testicles are shrinking ... I think it must be the stress," said Rat's teammate.

Found with the PEDs was a schematic depicting an intricate underground tunnel system that would run from the locker room to what looks to be near NAIT's International Centre. It is now assumed that an international athlete was planning on creating these tunnels to traffic banned substances between the two locations. NAIT has expressed concerns over the International Centre's close proximity to their new Pharmaceutical Sequestered Techniques and Chemical Enhancement program lab spaces; the very building in which Jim Rat studies how to make and distribute PEDS.

"The end of this tunnel system comes strangely close to our new labs spaces ... it's almost like whoever made these plans purposely built the tunnel to have easy access between Jim Rat's locker and to our extensive PED supply," said a NAIT program chair.

The league is still investigating, but their findings are conclusively proving what we all know – it was definitely not Jim Rat.

All eyes on this little guy

By CONNER TOFFAN

Seven-year-old hockey prodigy Tanner Son-deen didn't try to put on a one-man show at the 2018 Timbits elite prospect skills combine, but he did anyway. The scene was amazing. One seven-year-old turned a classic little tykes hockey game into a zoo of scouts, coaches, GMs and NHL fans, all looking to catch a glimpse of the future of the NHL. Tanner showed his scoring prowess when he was able raise the puck off the ice.

Even Canadian hockey legend Donald Grapes showed up to catch a glimpse of the phenom, "YA KNOW HE LOOKS LIKE A GOOD TRONNA BOY, TOUGH GUY TOO. TWO THUMBS UP!" Grapes explained about the Edmonton native.

The son of Vancouver Canucks legend Max Son-deen is already being compared to greats like Wayne Gretzky and Mario Lemieux. According to Tanner, he scored 104 goals and racked up 98 assists in 34 games while playing underage in the 8-9 year old IBEHL (Itty Bitty Elite Hockey League). When asked about the stellar performance that already has NHL teams ready to tank, Tanner said, "It's really easy actually, my mom ties my skates and I got a new Spiderman toy, wanna see?"

After watching Tanner play in real life, I can tell you that Tanner is more than a Sports Illustrated cover, a Tim Hortons ad, or an urban legend.

Because he's also the newest Nike athlete.

Tanner just signed a groundbreaking 12-year-deal in exchange for a lifetime supply of his favourite pregame meal, Alphagetti.

The kid can raise the puck, almost tie his own skates and has the work ethic of his home country of Canada while carrying the grace and finesse in his game that comes from his dad's Swedish roots.

Tanner isn't flawless though, and he still risks falling down many teams' draft boards for reasons like the controversy that surrounds his age. In recent interviews, Tanner has been bouncing back and forth on his age. Some days he's seven, and other days he's seven-and-a-half. This puts his NHL draft eligibility in serious jeopardy.

Many, including his coach are worried.

"The kid's just gotta figure it out. He's almost eight ... I think ... If he's serious about this NHL Hall of Fame thing, he's gotta gather himself and grow the hell up."

Tanner has recently been photographed at many different houses lately stuffing himself full of birthday cakes and apple juice.

"The apple juice is a serious issue. If he can't lay off the drinks and the partying soon, he might not be cut for this league," one anonymous source using the name "Greg Mac-tavish" exclaimed.

When asked about his biggest struggle, Tanner, collected as always, explained that "[his] hockey bag is pretty heavy and sometimes [he] has trouble wheeling it into the dressing room." It's clear the partying isn't a concern to him.

It's heavy stuff, but for now Tanner is stuck in-between preschool and worldwide icon.

There's a lot of people that can play hockey, but no one does it like Tanner.

Parents, gear up for sports wars!

By CONNER TOFFAN

Every offseason, parents pay big dollars to send their kids off to sports camps. What they don't realize is that before they try and better their kids, they need to improve themselves. The parents need to step up their game from this point forward. Whether your kid is going to the MLB, NFL, NBA, NHL or any other pro sports leagues, here's some tips for all you parents to help improve your future pro's performance.

One of the most important parts of being a strong sports parent is your performance in the stands. You need to take control, like a pitcher on the mound, or a goalie in their crease. There are many ways to be dominant in the stands.

The best way to take control in the bleachers is to be the loudest you can. You need to be the quarterback of the stands.

First off, yell at the ref (or ump) as loud as you can. They are getting paid to officiate the game, and anything less than perfection deserves punishment. It's easy for them; know the rules and don't face the punishment. As a parent, you need to come up with your own creative insults. "Do you need glasses, stripes," just won't get the job done anymore. Try using newer, modern insults such as: "if you had one more eye, you'd be a cyclops", or "damn ref, even Stevie Wonder saw that call." Sometimes parents do need to use the KISS method, Keep It Simple Stupid. A simple "Ref, you suck!" Or "Hey ref, I fucked your wife!" will do if they're not learning their lesson.

Your influence as a parent goes far beyond the generic stands-screaming though. If you want to be a truly transformative parent, you need to extend your influence. One thing you'll have to do as the leader of the parent group is deal with the parents you don't like on your team. The best way to do it is take it out on their kids. One unique method I've learned is to offer the biggest kid on the other team a Dairy Queen blizzard to take out the problem-parents kid. Some people will ask what to do if there's no hitting allowed in the league. Who cares – does the kid want a blizzard?

Another way you can help improve your kid's performance is to rattle the other team. Outside the rink, flipping off an eight year old, or giving them a throat-slash-gesture might be deemed unacceptable by society, but in the rink, all bets are off. If you want to be a well-known parent, do everything you can to throw the other team off. Also consider doing some of your own "scouting". If you see a heavier-set kid, call him 'cheeseburger' or a boy with long hair a 'girl'.

Hockey parents, your kids are undoubtedly the best. If they ever sit down on the bench, you need to stand up for your kids. The volunteer coaches have a duty to play your kid more than the rest. Some ways to approach a coach about this are through angry postgame screaming matches in front of everyone, and strongly-worded emails.

Another way to help out your kid is to never shut up about how good they are to anyone and everyone who is willing (or unwilling) to listen. They are the best, after all.

The competition isn't just on the ice, court, or field but in the stands too. As a parent group, you need to establish dominance. Claim your side in the stands early, and draw the line. Sports venues are all about compartmentalization. You got friends on the other side? To hell with friends – this is about much more than friendship.

For a full four-year program on this, please see Page 2.

Adam & Eve's offspring at play

By JORY PROFT

Historians, alongside pornography academics, have found similarities between the early stories of incest found in the Bible, and the popularity of today's incestuous role-play porn.

A recent archeological excavation recovered a large collection of incest porn produced by the adult children of Adam and Eve. The creations featured stone tablet etchings, painted pottery, beadwork, and many other mediums. Some of civilization's earliest metal work was also found in the collection; created by the couple's first-born, murderous, metal smith son, Cain.

The most intricate and well-preserved piece's title was translated to, Brother Cain Tricks Sister Into Sex While Parents Are Away From Dwelling – drawing similarities to the work done in modern 'Fauxcest' porn. A 2018 production titled, Brother Tricks Step-Sister Into Sex While Parents Aren't Home, features a nearly-identical plot, as do many films in this category.

Fauxcest porn refers to a genre of adult-filmmaking centred on performers role-playing as family members and engaging in sexual acts together. The genre has exploded recently with searches for "Step Mom", "Step Sister", and "Mom" all being included in Pornhub's top 10 most-searched terms of 2017; two of which sit in the Top 5.

And the discovery of Adam and Eve's descendants' adult work has only proven to provoke an even further growth in simulated-incest productions.

Since the public release of the Biblical incest porn, "930 year old dad", "55 sibling orgy", and "Sodom and Gomorrah" were the most-searched terms on Pornhub in September 2018. The searches show a direct correlation between the recent archeological findings and 2018's desire for inter-family relations, as Adam was said to have lived to 930 years old, and had 55 children.

The artifacts have even shook up the LGBTQ+ porn scene due to pieces depicting acts between Adam and Eve's 33 sons, and between their 22 daughters. "Adam and Steve" has become one of most-searched items on many gay porn sites as of September 2018.

Although controversial, sermons across the world have been incorporating these findings and audience attendance has been increasing.

"Finally a way to relate the stories of early-Christianity to the fast-moving world that we've been waiting for at the church," said a preacher.

While tablet-users only represented nine per cent of Pornhub's site visitors in 2017, the numbers have risen to nearly 30 per cent. It is believed that since stone tablets of the time were used to etch the incestuous acts, porn "purists" recognized that viewing Fauxcest videos on modern tablets was the best way to consume this media.

"Music-lovers prefer to listen to their favourite artists on vinyl. We think tablets are the way early Biblical figures would have wanted us to enjoy their work," said the moderator of The Porn Purists Facebook group.

The effect these recent discoveries have had on the adult film industry has been substantial and is continually growing.

"Porn watching Christians are now able to relate to the teachings of divine creation as the serpent could represent the taboo allure of Fauxcest porn and the Forbidden Fruit would be the viewer's family member," said the preacher.

Debate follows pro-life campaign

By JORY PROFT

A group of fetal-actors are outraged over the hiring of an eight-year-old actor in an upcoming pro-life campaign.

The decision has provoked a conversation in the performing arts community over whether hiring child actors is unfair to hard-working fetuses trying to make it in the business.

"It's already hard enough to find good roles for fetuses, but competing against these already-established actors is career feticide," said Abe Ortion, a representative of the SUGMA.

Ortion believes that the industry's history of casting grown adults to play high school students has directly led to the trend of grown children being recruited for fetal roles.

The performer worries that these castings will create unrealistic expectations and body positivity issues for fetal actors. He believes if these parts keep going to older and older actors, people are going to lose sight of what fetuses really look like.

"Fetuses aren't flawless, put-together kids with a full head of hair – we're still coming into our own at this stage in our lives! Some of us don't even have fully-formed arms or legs yet ... heck, some of us are still embryos," said Ortion.

Hollywood has seen its fair share of fetal performers struggle under the pressure of this competitive business – many actors not even living to see their second trimester. Ortion tells us he feels the competitive stress everyday that passes in his womb.

"My mom said if I don't work on my line delivery, I won't see my own delivery," he said.

Although most fetuses' eyes are fused shut until nearly the third trimester, Ortion believes that industry bigwigs are the ones that need to open their eyes to this problem.

"People may say I'm a dreamer, but fetuses actually cannot dream until around 28 weeks. I think there's an easy solution to this problem that Hollywood is not willing to fix ... I'm just tired of seeing so many fetal actor's careers ended prematurely," said Ortion.

You can see Abe Ortion in the upcoming Terminator prequel where he plays a fetal John Connor.

A real deal

HOT HOT HOT BUY!!!!

An old historic property located alongside Wayne Gretzky Drive, this place features an open-concept main floor, a only slightly leaky roof, around 300 rooms, a needlessly huge front-yard and it's conveniently located near the LRT. Downstairs, you'll be amazed by the emptiness of the old world-class training facilities!

Out back you will find a Zamboni garage for all of your parking and storage needs! This property carries a lot of character. You'll find a new surprise every day in this house! For you horror fans, it's rumoured to be haunted by the ghosts of Oilers past! If you have one unimaginably, otherworldly large family, Northlands Coliseum is perfect for you!

Capricorn

You will be suffocating this week, literally. It will be impossible to move forward or move your arms and legs because you'll be wrapped so tight in protective plastic like someone's going to ship you to Sao Paolo and you're breakable AF. JK. The bubble wrap is a metaphor for your emotionally unavailable ass and really no one could cut through your layers anyway. Enjoy life alone.

Aquarius

An important task this week is going to require your focus and attention, pulling you away from the conspiracy theory videos on YouTube. Don't worry ... David Icke will still be there when you get back, unless the reptilians find a way to silence him.

Pisces

Hello sadness my old friend. That's you this week, bringing out your favourite tear-jerkers and playing them on repeat. Why? It's September. You'll meet a hottie at the Nest who will suggest you read AA's 20 questions.

Aries

People will be taking a hard pass on your leadership skills this week, asking instead for your participation and for you to speak in a calm, normal voice. Watch out for the team building and trust exercises. Consider them obstacles to your goal of winning life.

Taurus

Be warned, Taurus. Those rock-solid plans that you made last week, someone is about to change them last minute.

Gemini

Sorry Gemini, that instructor wasn't actually flirting with you.

Cancer

It's going to be a tough week. Despite the fact you wear your precious heart on your sleeve and have the best puss-in-boots tears, only three people are going to ask you what's wrong. Also, it's chlamydia.

Leo

Oh my god. Can we please talk about something other than you for a second?

Virgo

Your going to have such a great week, you'll hardly be able to phantom it! Those pesky strives for perfectionism in yourself has actually subsided. You won't even notice other peoples mistakes. Enjoy your piece of mind, Virgo!

Libra

No matter what you do this week, there will be one person impervious to your charms. They may be on the spectrum. That's the only plausible cause.

Scorpio

Are you really dark and mysterious Scorpio? Or are you playing the strong silent type as to not let on that you already know what people are thinking and feeling and wearing, because you've been watching them ... always watching. A secret crush goes private on insta this week. Take those screenshots now.

Sagittarius

A dark vortex lures you. There is no escaping it. Some point this week, you will find yourself on the corner of 111 Street and 51 Avenue, where you will wait a whole 12 minutes for the lights to change. A whole 12 minutes to sit still, with yourself. Most call it purgatory, but for you, it's hell.

Our Cover Explained

In 2018, it feels we are living in a polarized world, where people believe that if something offends them it should not be talked about. We have transitioned into a black and white existence of “we” are right and “they” are wrong. In this environment the real victim has been comedy. This hyper-realistic drawing was draft one of our cover. It shows a prospector currently in the black/white zone, attempting to cross the line into the grey area, where gold sits on the other side. By crossing the line with some of our satirical work in this issue, we are looking to enter a sort of grey area, where really valuable conversations and discussions may lie.
