BRING 'EM IN

BY LARRY D. BOHALL

Growth is the lifeblood of your patrols, and of the Outpost. If your patrols are growing, so will your outpost. If your patrols stop growing, so will your outpost. To get your patrols on the right path, encourage boys to invite some friends to visit one of their patrol corners and the outpost meeting. Plan ahead, and you'll have new Royal Rangers!

At your next patrol meetings, ask each patrol member what boys they may know that could be good Rangers. Make a list of their names and addresses. Make sure that they meet the age requirements listed in your handbook. Now, set a date for the special "Invite 'Em!" patrol corner and outpost meeting, and start planning. This patrol corner and outpost meeting has to be good.

Between outpost meetings, appoint some of your members to invite your potential members. You may want to have their friends ask them, or have a couple of your patrol's "old-timers" invite them. Either way, make sure that someone contacts the boys. Make up some special invitations with your patrol name, emblem, address, and meeting time on them, and send or give them to your prospects.

Before the meeting, get the patrol corner in tip-top shape. Hang up special patrol photos, set out copies of Adventures in Camping and your Royal Rangers Handbook, display your patrol standard or flag and any trophies your gang has won.

During the meeting, make sure that there's plenty of action. Have a super spe-

SPEAKING THE LANGUAGE OF ROYAL RANGERS

for 22 years

BY JOHN ELLER

The Royal Rangers Leader's Manual is the most significant book ever published concerning the Assemblies of God ministry to boys. It is a primary tool of communication.

Prepared by Johnnie Barnes in 1962, the Leader's Manual was enlarged and reprinted in 1983. It has stood the test of time. Most books published in America today go out of print in seven years or less.

The Leader's Manual contains ten dynamic chapters that show the leader of boys how to convey the challenge of Royal Rangers and obtain the best results. The Leader's Manual speaks the language.

The Royal Rangers Ministry. Chapter 1 shows how to organize, enlist, and promote Royal Rangers. The purpose, goals, methods, meetings, and uniforms are discussed. It is here we also learn about the emblem, code, pledge, and motto.

The Patrol System. Chapter 2 is focused on boys working together in an active patrol. The patrol spirit, standards, and other means of organization and identification are illustrated.

Leading Boys. Chapter 3 deals with understanding boys, their attitudes, needs, and problems. How to develop skills in counseling is spelled out in detail.

Leading Boys to Christ. Chapter 4 contains the best guide to soul winning found anywhere. Preparation, the setting, and preservation are all given thorough treatment, along with some very practical tips in leading boys to Christ.

Outpost Meetings. Chapter 5 shows how to plan interesting and meaningful meetings, measure advancement, and plan special activities.

The Advancement Trail. Chapter 6 reveals how to encourage advancement and give proper recognition. Advancement pins and other awards are illustrated, along with specific information about Royal Rangers uniforms.

The Camping Program. Chapter 7 gets into our big "drawing card." Here is information on camping and the needs of boys, trip planning and outdoor cooking. This chapter introduces District Powwows, the Frontiersman Camping Fraternity, and leadership instruction such as National Training Camp, National Training Trails, National Canoe Expedition, and more.

Games and Other Activities. Chapter 8 gives the right concepts of play, and shows how play meets some very basic needs for boys. There are some helpful hints on the art of leading games, and the value of play in physical fitness. A list of possible games is offered to spark the imagination, followed by suggestions for collections, hobbies, and crafts, and even trips.

Health and Safety. Chapter 9 covers such subjects as activities, protection, and preparedness with relation to health and safety. The leader is shown how to plan, promote, and carry out these events. Projects, swimming safety, and elementary lifesaving are introduced and explained.

Devotions. Chapter 10 is filled with "tried-and-proven" devotional themes showing the purpose of the devotions, equipment needed, Scripture, illustration, discussion, prayer, or closing ceremony.

The truly amazing aspect of the Leader's Manual is that all this information and more is contained in just 192 pages of the current edition! At your fingertips, in an easy-to-read style, is a literal lexicon for speaking that old language of compassion to a new generation of boys. Let the Royal Rangers Leader's Manual be your guide to grammatical usage as we reach, teach, and keep boys for Christ! HYPOTHERMIA

2 DRESS FOR WARMTH

3 HAVE ADEQUATE NUTRITION

4 CARRY EMERGENCY BIVOUAC GEAR

5 KNOW WHEN TO QUIT THE STRUGGLE AGAINST THE ELEMENTS

6 USE ISOMETRIC CONTRACTIONS TO GENERATE HEAT

BY FORGEY AND MEUNINCK

Hypothermia occurs when the body temperature of a person is lowered by exposure to wind, cold, and dampness. Lower it enough, and death will result! Dampness and wind are the most devastating factors to be considered—even more than temperature. It is possible to die of hypothermia in temperatures far above freezing. Most hypothermia deaths occur in the 30° to 50° range.

Proper insulation is the most important aspect of protection. By far the most valuable insulator when wet is wool. Wool loses only 40% to 60% of its insulating ability when wet. Protect the head and trunk with wool. Wool shirts have little bulk and can be invaluable additions to a day pack. Polarguard and Holofill II garments and sleeping bags have also proven to be valuable additions to the wilderness armamentarium. Thinsulate and polypropylene liners appear very promising. Proper nutrition and avoidance of exhaustion are further factors in preventing hypothermia.

The first response that the body has to a hypothermia condition is vasoconstriction.

tion in the skin, thus decreasing the flow of blood to the surface—which, in effect, lowers surface temperature, but preserves the core temperature. If this heat loss continues, the core temperature will begin to fall below 99°. Intense shivering followed by sluggish thinking and speech difficulty portend advancing hypothermia

Treatment is to prevent any further heat loss and carefully add heat to rewarm the victim. The ideal treatment would be to replace the core heat from the inside out, as subjecting the individual to an outside source of heat would cause the surface blood vessels to open and promote circulation to the surface. The initial effect this would have is to dump a load of very cold blood into the already over-cool core. The temperature of blood in the hands and feet may drop 40 to 50 degrees below that of the body's inner core.

It is essential to remove the victim from wind and place him/her in the best shelter available. Replace wet clothing with dry clothing if possible. Insulate the victim and place him/her in a sleeping bag with a stripped rescuer. A hypothermia victim alone in a well insulated sleeping bag will simply stay cold. If conscious give the victim warm drinks and candy or sweetened foods, if available. If no sleeping bag or fire is available, have the party huddle together. Avoid the use of alcohol—this may act as a vasodilator, thus releasing cold surface blood to the core.

In summary, prevention is the key to avoiding death from hypothermia. There are six steps to the prevention process: 1. Be aware of how insidious wet, wind, and cold can be—avoid unnecessary exposure. 2. Dress for warmth—prepare against wet and wind, remembering wool is your best friend. 3. Have adequate nutrition. 4. Carry emergency bivouac gear, such as a tube tent or trap. 5. Bivouac early before coordination and judgment are decreased—know when to quit the struggle against the elements and prepare camp. 6. Keep active using isometric contractions of various muscle groups to generate heat until desired warmth is produced. ★

BEWARE!

John Honeyman

WASHINGTON'S SPY

BY FRANCIS X. SCULLEY

In December of 1776, George Washington wrote to his brother, John Augustine: "I think the game is pretty near up. No man, I believe, ever had a greater choice of difficulties, and less means to extricate himself from them."

On November 23, the notorious Tory John Honeyman had escaped an American patrol and stumbled into a Hessian unit, also on reconnaissance. The half frozen New Jerseyite, who had served under Wolfe before the walls of Quebec, was well known to his would-be rescuers and was taken before Colonel Rall, Hessian commander at Trenton.

As always, a loyal subject of King George was welcome with the regiment explained Rall. After feeding the hapless looking fugitive, who looked like he had the intelligence of the average American country bumpkin, Rall queried his guest. The German was assured that the rag-tag Contimental army was no problem. Desertions were multiplying faster than enlistments. No one believed the war would last beyond 1777. One more victory would do it.

Count Kurt von Donop at Perth Amboy, commander of all German troops in North America, had repeatedly urged Johan Rall to fortify the village, and to particularly make certain that both King and Queen street had breastworks. Lord Cornwallis, preparing to return back to England and his beloved bride of two years, had also sent a message to Rall urging compliance with these orders. But Rall, was contemptuous of Continental troops. He had seen how they reacted to the bayonet at Long Island, and his regiment was the best in the world in the use of that weapon.

So Honeyman served His Majesty's allies the best way that he could, procuring and butchering cattle. On December 22, he had a special assignment from Colonel Rall to bring in a couple beeves for the upcoming Christmas celebration. And so Honeyman headed into the hinterlands for a raid on a Patriot farmhouse, and their stock of cattle. It was an easy assignment, Honeyman mused.

As he made his way through the snow, rope in hand, toward an unsuspecting cow, two ragged Continental cavalymen bore down on him. Turning quickly, the Tory saw that the game was up, but he fought furiously to escape, until one of his attackers felled him with a blow from the butt of his musket. Then, tied with the rope which was intended for the cow that witnessed the incident with bland indifference, the stumbling prisoner was headed toward the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware and Washington's camp.

Immediately taken before the Commander where Honeyman was roughly shoved into the room, the guards were startled when Washington dismissed them.

Then Honeyman, master American spy, revealed that Trenton was completely unguarded. There were no earthworks at either end of King or Queen streets. The foreigners were planning a Christmas celebration to transcend all others. Colonel Rall felt an attack was remote, even though he had been warned of such a possibility.

Washington called for the guards and ordered that his "prisoner" be locked up, and if he made an attempt to escape, he was to be "shot at once." Then the Commander called for a council of war, with his staff.

"Christmas day at night, one hour before day is the time fixed for our attempt on Trenton," was the terse order of the com-notorious Tory had escaped!

In the meantime, a fire broke out mysteriously in a haymow, and the guard left the little guardhouse in which Honeyman was confined. Equally mysterious was the fact that the door was also left open. Once more the notorious Tory had made good his escape, and once more he made it across the Delaware where a Hessian patrol found him, half frozen, and almost in a state of shock. The story he had told Rall must have been a convincing one, as the gullible German believed all he heard which was plenty. Washington's army was starving, and most of the troops were barefooted. Enlistments would expire within a week, and most of the army would not reenlist. Others were on the verge of mutiny.

A grin crept over Rall's face. It was just as he thought. So he made arrangements for the biggest Christmas celebration Trenton had ever seen. The breastworks could wait until after the holidays.

The rest is history. The blistering, well coordinated attack which the ragged army made on Trenton on the morning of December 26, 1776, was a complete success. Over 900 Hessian soldiers were taken prisoner, the Germans suffering another 100 casualties killed or wounded. Thousands of sorely needed bullets, as well as guns, fell into the hands of the jubilant American army. It was an astounding victory, at a time when American hopes were at their lowest ebb.

When the Landgrave of Hesse heard of the stunning defeat, he ordered that the Rall regiment would never again be allowed to bear colors, unless they were able to recapture the ones they had lost.

No one in America, save Washington, knew of the dual role that Honeyman was playing, and three times within the next few years, he was captured and sentenced to hang, but always he was mysteriously released or escaped. Other than the great effort at Trenton, his record throughout the remainder of the war, was one of obscurity.

In 1783, Washington and his staff visited John Honeyman at his home, shaking hands with his greatest spy in full view of the villagers who had scorned and hated the quiet man throughout the lengthy war.

While Honeyman was to remain in obscurity throughout history, The Patriotic Sons, Order of America erected a memorial fountain to the memory of John Honeyman on the New Jersey side of Washington Crossing Park which says: "Dedicated in memory of John Honeyman, who served Washington and the Continental Army as a spy."

AND THE WINNER IS . . .

BY SUSAN BELL FARRELL

It is going to be a big race this year. Ninety cars are registered. Racers have brought their cars from miles around and are now engaged in last minute preparations. They are still busy tightening or loosening screws, spinning wheels, putting graphite on axles, scheming to make their cars run faster. The weight regulation is strict, and some racers are taking off extra trim.

As the crowd of spectators grows, some of the racers admire the other cars: "Look at the paint job on that black one!" "Do you think that thing runs as good as it looks?" "How did they do THAT?" They compare styles and marvel at some of the most elaborate modifications.

When they are finally ready for inspection, the racers line up, get their official numbers, weigh in their cars, and are signed into the log. Each racer looks anxious as the judges examine his car. All eye the scale critically. So important is the weight requirement, some owners even drill holes in their cars to remove a little more excess bulk.

The excited noise of the crowd grows with anticipation. Eager spectators strain to see around each other, admiring the more flashy cars and reading slogans painted on the sides. They climb onto seats or hoist children to their shoulders. They peer through binoculars vying for the best view. They call encouragement to their favorite racers and grin back at the smiles and thumbs-up signs. The feeling of competition swells to a cheer at the announcement: "We're ready to race!"

Ninety sleek cars stand ready behind the starting line. A total of 28 pounds of rubber and wood. Not 28 tons? Not rubber and steel? No, each of these beauties weighs no more than five ounces and was made by its owner from a six-inch by 1½-inch by 1½-inch block of pine. But the diminished size of the cars doesn't diminish the excitement.

This is the annual Royal Rangers Pine-wood Derby, sponsored by Evangel Assembly of God, Claremore, Oklahoma. The idea was to get dads and sons working together on a project," says Royal Rangers leader, Ralph Carlson. "But then the men wanted their own cars! We had to have a category for them this year." He explains,

"There are fourteen age categories, one for each year from five to seventeen. And then the men, of course. The cars for each age group are raced three at a time—except for one category. We only had one fifteen-year-old entry, so he will win that category IF he makes it to the end of the track!"

The hopeful owners wait at the bottom of the handmade track and retrieve their cars after each heat ends with the cars crash-landing into a pillow. When #10 wins its category, the owner, eleven-year-old Mark, agrees to reveal his secrets. "The car is full five ounces. We put a weight in the center and sanded the wheels and axles to make them smooth. If the wheels hit the guide strip on the track, it slows them down, so the wheels need to be straight. We ran it down boards to test it." He adds, "There was a lot of engineering by my dad." Mark's advice is good. Of the five cars entered by Mark, his dad, and his brothers, all but one win their age categories, and one car is even runner-up to the Grand Champion.

There are other strategies evident. Nearly all the cars have been carved and sanded into sleek shapes. David, age ten, says he studied aerodynamics. One man whose car is named "The Cockroach" good-naturedly insists he has invested two million dollars into his little car. Another man attributes his win to the "prayers of my wife!"

As the announcer calls the names and numbers of the winners, the scorekeepers chart the results on a chalkboard. The winners of each heat race each other until every age category has first, second, and third place winners. Tied races are run again. And again and again and again in one heart-breaking close race. There are wrecks on the track which disqualify the wayward cars. Racers relieve some of their tension by teasing: “I want #46 dismantled!” “The pastor is cheating!” The Cockroach’s owner declares he can’t take the pressure and hides his eyes.

The race for Grand Champion is among all the first place winners. One car begins to appear in every race. It wins the five-year versus six-year race. It wins the next race and the next. Its owner is five-year-old Ben. The crowd has found a favorite. The car finally beats everything but Shawn’s car. Shawn is twelve, and he has just beat his own dad to be the semi-finalist. His competitor for Grand Champ is the seemingly unbeatable Ben.

The crowd is chanting, “Ben! Ben! Ben!” Ben is ceremoniously lifted to the announcer’s table so he can see the big race. He is calmly sucking his thumb. Shawn is wringing his hands. He has his own cheering section. The crowd roars, “Ben! Ben!” “Shawn! Shawn!” “BEN! BEN!” “SHAWN!”

Everyone is on his feet, crowding the track. The two cars are poised six feet in the air at the top of the 32-foot track, ready for the last race.

Handwringing works better than thumb-sucking, and Shawn’s car manages to beat Ben’s to the pillow. Shawn is the Grand Champion! He tearfully accepts a huge trophy and crows, “I knew I was going to win!” He’s keeping his secrets, though. He wants to win next year, too!

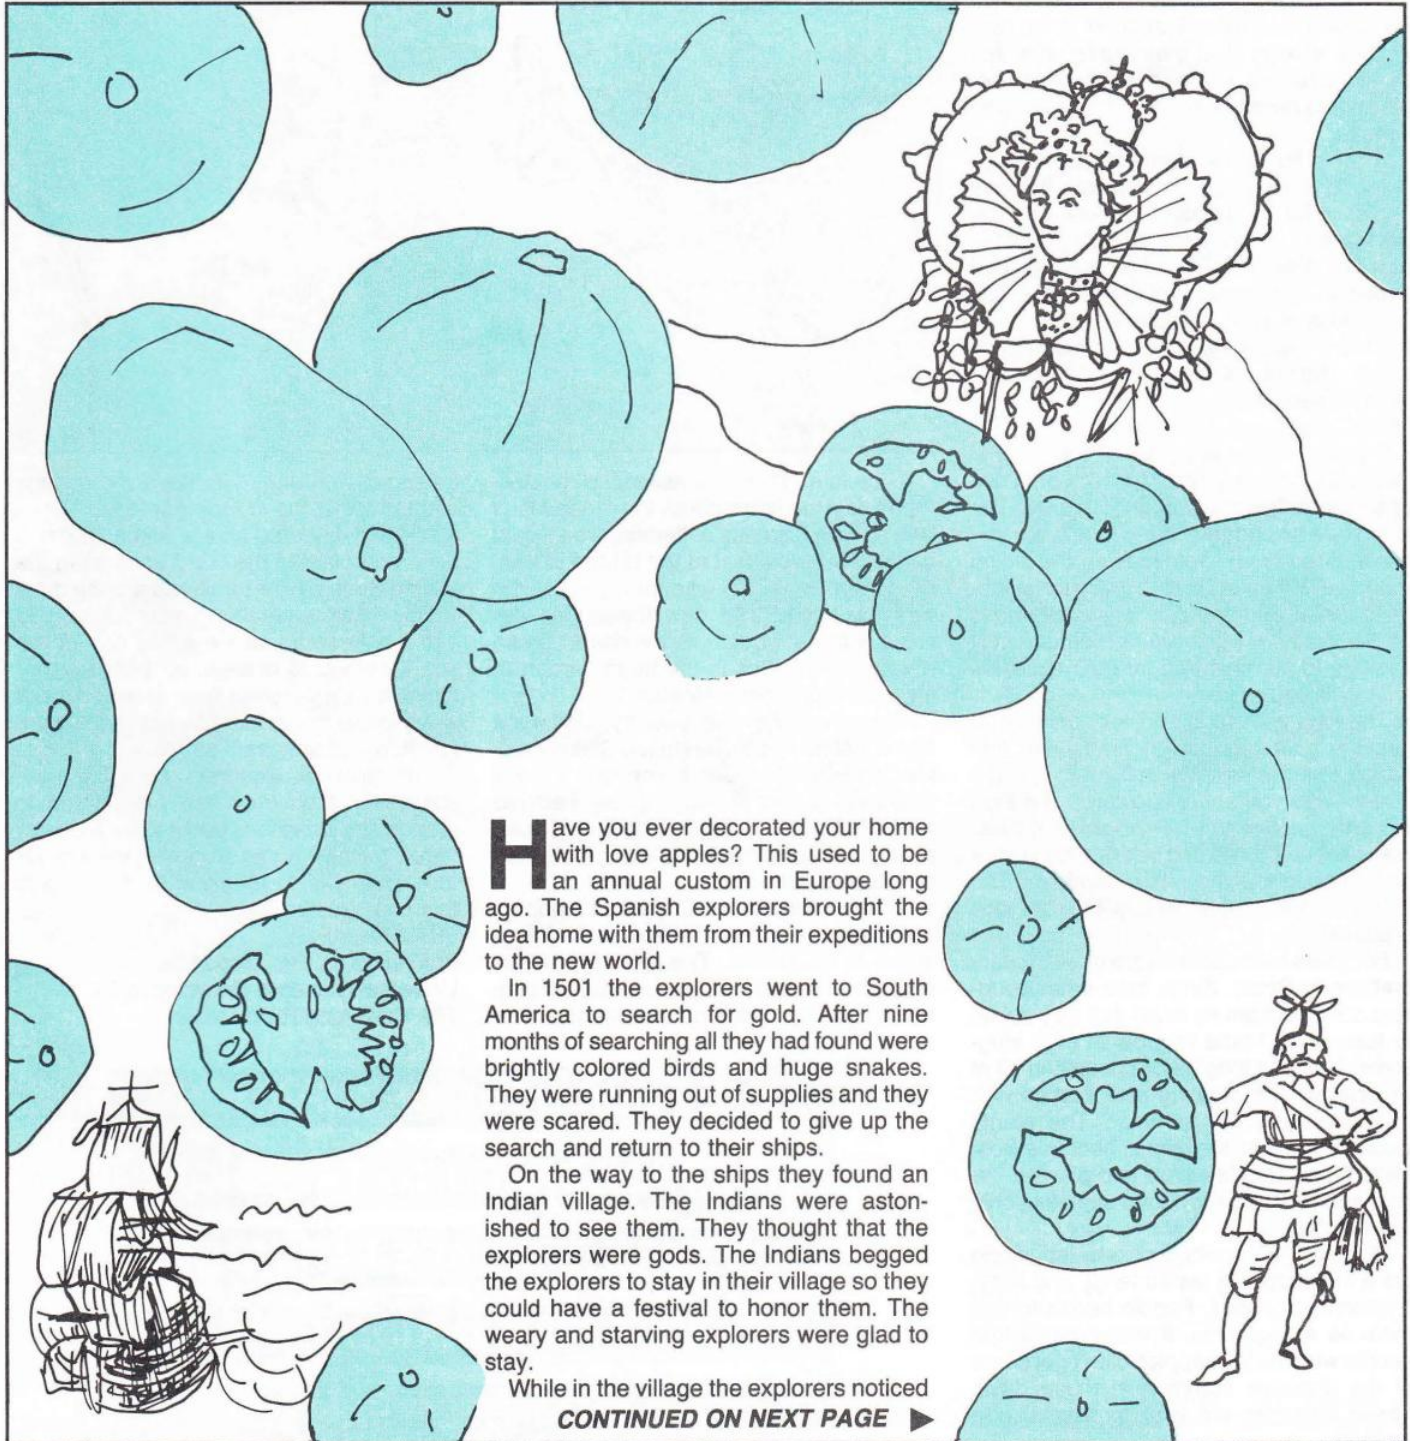

The trophy for Most Original Car goes to #66, surprising the fans of “Chitty Chitty Bang Bang”; it’s an elaborate reproduction of the movie car. There are two other memorable cars: one with working headlights and one with “Holy Roller” painted on the side.

All the winners line up for ribbons, trophies, pictures, and congratulations. The cars are claimed by their owners; winners or not, they are a source of pride and pleasure. They’re no longer just five ounces of wood. As the owner of the Cockroach says, “Don’t play with it, son, it’s not a toy!”

As the crowd breaks up, many of the racers have their heads together, studying the lines and details of each other’s cars, trading ideas. And planning already for next year. ★

LOVE APPLES

BY FRANCINE HERBST

Have you ever decorated your home with love apples? This used to be an annual custom in Europe long ago. The Spanish explorers brought the idea home with them from their expeditions to the new world.

In 1501 the explorers went to South America to search for gold. After nine months of searching all they had found were brightly colored birds and huge snakes. They were running out of supplies and they were scared. They decided to give up the search and return to their ships.

On the way to the ships they found an Indian village. The Indians were astonished to see them. They thought that the explorers were gods. The Indians begged the explorers to stay in their village so they could have a festival to honor them. The weary and starving explorers were glad to stay.

While in the village the explorers noticed that the Indians decorated their homes with exotic and beautiful red and yellow fruits. There were a variety of shapes and sizes in both colors. The Indians called them something that sounded like love apples. The Indians discovered them growing on vines in the nearby Andes mountains. They loved the bright colors so much that they took some vines home and grew them in their own gardens. All of the fruit was used for decoration.

The explorers thought that the yellow apples looked like gold. They were so tired of the new world that they decided to do a daring thing. They would take love apples home to King Ferdinand instead of gold.

The explorers asked the Indians to give them some vines and love apples. The Indians were so afraid of them that they agreed willingly. But they made sure that the explorers understood that the love apples could never be eaten. They were poisonous.

After a long and dangerous voyage home to Spain the explorers took the love apples to King Ferdinand. He was very angry that all they had brought home from the new world was a poisonous fruit. He had expected gold and many riches. He was so furious that he threatened to execute the explorers on the spot! The men shook in fear. Their hearts were pounding so loudly in their ears that they could barely hear what Queen Isabella was saying.

She smiled and said, "What a wonderful discovery these explorers have made. Look at all the different sizes and shapes. The colors are so cheerful. They match the yellow and red in my tapestries on the dining room walls. I have been looking for something just like this to use for centerpieces on the tables. These brave men certainly deserve to be rewarded for their excellent choice of souvenirs."

The king was surprised and pleased to see the queen happy. It made him feel happy too. He told the explorers, "If the queen says you should be rewarded then you shall be. Not only will I spare your lives, we will have a three day celebration in your honor throughout the whole kingdom." The explorers fell to their knees in relief and gratitude.

For years love apples were used for decorations in Spain. Kings from other countries admired them so much that they asked to take some home to grow in their kingdoms. It wasn't long before people in all of Europe were decorating their homes with love apples in the summer. The plants wouldn't grow in the winter because frost killed them. Seeds saved and planted the next spring would grow love apples in only two months.

No one knows when or why someone ate a love apple. It tasted tangy and juicy. It wasn't poisonous. People began to use them as a vegetable. It was noticed that people who ate love apples didn't get some of the diseases common in those days. These diseases are scurvy, rickets, and beriberi.

In the late 1700s ambassadors from Europe told Americans about their marvelous love apples. Thomas Jefferson, who would be the third president of the United States, heard this news. He was an inventor who was fascinated with new things. He decided that he would grow some of these wonder vegetables in the huge garden of his plantation home, Monticello.

After searching the country, Jefferson found that no one in the United States grew love apples. That didn't stop him. He ordered seeds from Spain. The seeds arrived with a notice that said the name had been changed. From now on love apples would be called tomatoes.

Other Americans learned that Thomas Jefferson had planted a new kind of vegetable in his garden. The news that these vegetables would help people stay healthy spread rapidly. Since no one wants to risk getting sick, many of these Americans planted tomatoes in their gardens.

It's two hundred years since Thomas Jefferson planted the first tomatoes in the United States. Now tomatoes are the most widely grown vegetable in this country. You can eat fresh tomatoes every day of the year thanks to all of the green house grown tomatoes. Clever chefs have invented many ways to use tomatoes. The best known are ketchup and spaghetti sauce.

The Spanish explorers were far more successful than they had ever dared to dream. The poisonous decorations that they dared to take home to their king are far more valuable to mankind than any gold that ever existed.

lot more than just reading and talking! Wrap everything up with a special closing.

But don't stop there! During your patrol meeting, plan a special "Invite 'Em" hike. Like your "Invite 'Em" meeting, you need to make this hike something special—use a compass, build a fire, cook a meal. Use as many Rangercraft skills as you can; the more, the better!

When the hike's done, have a patrol campfire. Teach your guests the patrol yell and song, have some skits, sing a song or two. Make it fun, make it memorable. Then put out the fire and hike home. With an introduction to Royal Rangers like that, your guests will be ready to join up! Introduce them to the whole outpost at your next outpost meeting.

Remember, the key to outpost growth is patrol growth. When your patrol grows, your outpost grows. So get cracking! Plan an "Invite 'Em" patrol meeting for this month—and bring 'em in! ★

SELF-SUFFICIENT?

BY MILTON BULLOCK

I decided I'd be self-sufficient. You know, like the guy in one of those back-to-basics magazines who fills his cereal bowl up with assorted bugs, pours milk over them and eats them like Colonel Crunchies. I'd get out of the Houston rat race.

Of course, I knew that no one was completely self-sufficient. All things come from God, but aside from that fact, I would not depend on anyone else for my livelihood. I'd buy a little piece of ground in some remote area of East Texas, raise a garden, some chickens, a pig or two, a milk cow, and let's see, sugar for my cereal. Wait a minute, we depend on Cuba or some place for sugar. Well, I could trade some eggs for sugar.

O.K., what's first? Some land. Well, if the Houston economy would hold up a little longer, I could save enough money to buy some land. Of course, the company I worked for was dependent on the economy and my job was dependent upon the prosperity of my company. My wife's job was dependent on the same considerations. Well, if push came to shove, I could depend on my mother to lend me enough money to buy some land. Of course, I'd have to depend on my wife to pay her back because I'd be too busy building a house on the land.

Well, I finally got the land and built a cabin by depending on the Houston economy, my company, my wife's company, our jobs, my mother, my wife's parents, and some good friends. I was getting very close to being self-sufficient.

Depending on whether or not my wife got a job near our remote area, we could move out of Houston and to our little self-sufficient paradise. Of course, we had to depend on there being a town close enough to our property in East Texas to provide jobs because my wife was depending on me to develop our property and I would be depending on her to feed us. She couldn't feed us without depending on a job which was dependent upon a close-by town which was dependent upon an economy which in turn would support a business large enough to provide jobs for people.

After we depended upon Dr. DeBakey's team to perform a four-way bypass on me to save my life and our insurance company to come up with 25-30 thousand, we were ready to move to our little self-sufficient abode in the East Texas Piney Woods. My wife found a job which she could depend on to provide funds for us to buy food and other things necessary to sustain life, providing, of course, there were nearby grocery stores and other businesses which we could depend on to stay open for a while. No doubt they would be able to stay open, depending upon whether or not they had customers like us.

We've been here three years now. My wife works in a nearby town and I work on our place. I depend on her and she depends on me. We aren't self-sufficient yet. We depend on friends and relatives for love, encouragement and companionship and we depend on the local economy for income.

We have become very dependent on waking up to the sounds of birds singing in the forest. We've found that we just can't live without the clear blue skies, fresh air, the stars and the rolling green hills of East Texas. Above all, we have learned how dependent we are on the country that provides the freedom that allows us to live as we choose and how dependent the country is on the blessings of God.

We're not self-sufficient yet, but it looks like we may have a nice garden this year, depending on the weather. ★
