When you're looking for a company that specializes in commercial cleaning, you want to make sure that the company has experience with all the different types of spaces and situations you might encounter. That's why it's important to hire a company that not only has a wide range of experience but also has the tools and equipment available to handle any situation.

Understand your needs.

To begin solving the most common commercial cleaning issues, first understand your needs. Knowing and understanding the needs of your business is the key to finding a solution for any problems you may be having with your current janitorial service.

If you are not sure how to go about this, here are some questions you should ask:

- What is the average size of your office/work space?
- How many employees work there?
- Do you have an open floor plan or cubicle-style layout?
- Are there any special requirements for specific areas in your office (e.g., offices for executives)?

After answering these questions and more, you will be able to determine whether or not it would be beneficial for you to hire a new cleaning service provider or continue using the one that you currently use.

Communicate with your cleaning service.

One of the most common issues that we see on a daily basis is communication. If you're not communicating with your cleaning service, then it's hard for them to know what you want and need. If there's something specific that you'd like cleaned, then let them know ahead of time. This will save time and energy in the long run! If there's anything else that needs to be done around your office, such as moving furniture or filing cabinets, then let them know so they can prepare accordingly.
